The ladies of the Baptist Church will hold an oyster supper in the McCabe store, Mercur block, Wednesday evening Nov. 16, commencing at 5 o'clock and continuing during the evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all to call and get supper.
By order of Committee.

MONROE ITEMS—Mr. Editor:—Friday and Saturday, the 11th and 12th instants, gave us quite a diversified treat here in Monroe, from our usual bill of fare. The Convention of teachers and officers pertaining to our school and educational interests, with its usual routine of business, was a matter of considerable excitement to our citizens generally; and especially so to the aspirants for literary distinction. A very fine appearing assembly of young teachers, male and female, were present, to listen or act, or to do whatever had been assigned them by way of giving life and zest to their annual gathering.

We were pleased with the promptness with which most of them responded to the call, when they were invited to take the rostrum and fill their bills. Some very fine recitations were rendered in a way that did credit to taste and culture, and evinced talent unmistakable just back of the throne, that made the throne a matter to be admired. We do not presume to make any distinctions in the productions or offering of our young friends, but simply say of the whole,—it was good, better, best.

There was one feature of the entertainments, where age, position, and experience would make criticism tolerable, and perhaps justifiable.

The Rev. gentleman appointed or invited to deliver the address of the occasion, was most fortunate in the selection of his subject, "the formation of character," and tolerably successful in the subject matter, manner, delivery and diction.

We were of the opinion, however, that the distinctive line betwixt character and reputation, was not made and kept sufficiently clear. Character is what there is actually of the individual. His weight, integrity, habits, dignity and his real worth. This part of the man is not easily "ruined" having once been well formed. Reputation is what he appears to be—what his neighbors think or say about him. In fact it is what he is reputed to be; and what he will sell for in the markets, be the same more or less, and is wholly aside from character; while yet it may be the creature of character. Reputation is what the politicians call a man's record. Character is what avails in places of trust and great responsibilities. In his selections of individuals for illustration, I think him not the most fortunate.

His opponents might have assailed Mr. Garfield's reputation; while they could no more infract his invulnerable character, than they could swallow eleven miles of the rocky mountains.

A man's character may be good, while his reputation is bad; and it may be the very reverse. They are as distinct as the man and the coat that he wears. PENCIL.

The gentleman referred to in the following notice from the Elmira Free Press proposes to give lessons in this place, and perhaps Mr. QUINLAN may secure him for a lecture in the Institute course:

Prof. E. C. Eldridge, who has charge of the art department at the college, gave a very interesting and entertaining lecture in the parlors of the Institution last evening. The two large rooms were crowded with the students and a number of invited guests from the city. The subject of the lecture was the Roman forum. Prof. Eldridge spoke well and as a man will speak who is talking of what his own eyes have seen. He had helped too in his descriptions in the shape of large photographs, which, with the accompanying words, set the famous spot before the audience, even as though they had been there themselves. The attention paid and the interest shown must have been gratifying to the speaker. Prof. Eldridge expects to give other lectures during the winter on similar subjects, the one last evening being the opening one of the series. We are sure that they will be very popular and that the larger accommodations provided by the chapel will be necessary to make room for all who may desire to hear him.
