and that the negroes in who alleys and door yards were firing at them, and that brickbats were also freely flying, A considerable number of citizens had joined the police force in and about the Institute, and great crowds, gathered at the corners of Canal and Common, and along the rout to the City Hall, were firing at or rushing upon the few prisoners brought along.

Finally a crowd of policemen and citizens made a rush at the doors of the Convention chamber and broke them down The exact order of what immediately followed no man can tell. It is only certain that as they entered the attacking party delivered a velley into the huddled mass of members and spectas tors, which kitled and wounded several, and received one, severely wounding some of the policemen and killing some of the citizens. Each side charges that the other fired first, and whether from testimony of participants or from the sound of the volleys, it seems impossible to reach any other conclusion than that they were nearly or quite simultaneous.

There followed a series of short and bloody individual conflicts. Negroes were shot down, members of the Convontion wounded and arrested, and the scenes of violence in the streets intensified tenfold as persons began to emerge from the building.

Standing at this moment in the highs est verandah of Victor's restaurant. looking directly down the street to the Institute, was a late Major General of the United States service. He saw four policemen bear out the seemingly liteless perhaps fanatical member of the Convention, a prominent Free Mason, and a gentleman against whose private character no charge was ever made. His head hung down till it almost drugged the pavement, blood was streaming from wounds and marking the path by which he was borne. Around this inanimate body the crowd rushed and blasphemed, or laughed and cheered. At last a cart was reached, and the body was thrown in, when a more determined and the rioters broke through. Before the cart could be started, several blows had been rained apon the bleeding body, and the General felt sure that as one man's hand descended he caught the gleam of a knife

The news flew among the noters that Dr. Dostie was killed, and it was everywhere received, many squares off even, where people had scarcely became inflamed with the lever of the massacre, with expressions of satisfaction and positive delight,

Meanwhile, returning from Canal street up Carondelet, I had just secured a place on the verandah of a friend's Institute, and a dense mob crowded street toward the St Charles Hotel. As they approached we could make out four policemen with cocked revolvers, and in their midst, with hat knocked off, with coat nearly torn from his shoulders, with blood clot ted over his head and about his neck, with citizens rushing at him, striking at him, shouting, "kill him," partly limping and partly jerked along by the infuriated policemen, came Michael Hahn, ex-mem-ber of the United States House of Representatives, ex Governor of Louisiana. and United States Senator elect from the Legislature of Louisiana-the man to whom Abraham Lincoln confidentially wrote that 'negro suffrage might yet in some hour of peril, help to keep the Sewel of Liberty in the lamily of Freedom!" In ten minutes he was lying bleeding and feverish, in a cell of the city jail! 'He was more scared than hurt,' is the cool comment of the deading journal' this morning. A little later came the only stroke of the comic in all this said tragedy -The boaster of the Convention, the hero who would do and and die for his new born love of negro suffrage, had not yet been found. Arrayed in spotless white he had been seen to enter the Chamber before the opening of the Cons vention, but since the firing began, no eye of negro had been cheered, no heart of Convention member nerved, no soul of policemen inflamed by the radiant sight of R King Cutler. The last member had been driven out by the moband the last negro stabbed; the Chamber was occupied only by the police, the other rioters and the dead- but still the hero was missing. At last a bright thought struck a policeman. He explored the chimney. Its throat was narrow, same command as military governor of war are sounded, and they can a'ready who to-day is pining in prison at Fort.

To the amazement of all every shot missed him "But," exclaimed a reputable citizen-let the expression be set down forever to his honor with those who cnew him-rit I'd had a pistol I'd have killed the miscreant policemen."

Carts were constantly passing, laden with the bodies of murdered negroes .-In one I counted six; many had two and three. All were greated with laughter; occasionally one evoked a cheer.-Now and then a carriage passed with some wounded write man, and not unfrequently the crowds would make a rush upon him to see if he were one of the bnoxious radicals.

Meantime, the fighting negroes, re treating below Canal street, into the French quarter of the city, had once or twice reorganized, and made charges on the police, in the hope of rescaing some of their friends or avenging their death In the course of the afternoon ebetwen twenty and thirty policemen were thus wounded. The number on the other side can only be given by conjecture. --Wherever a negro, either entirely peaces able or by accident cut off from his comrades, was found, he was pursued, and if possible shot.

One fell thus near the noted millenery hop of Madame Sophie, a few doors below Blelock's bookstore. A gentleman-so far as clothes go, and general demeanor-stepped out from the sidewalk, and devoted a minute or two to vigorously kicking the dead body. A systander made some expression of horror and disgust, when a policeman turn ed sharp on him with, "Are you one of them, say?" He protested that he was not. "He lies," exclaimed another, "he's a Yanka settler!" The luckless person protested that he was not; the policeman fiercely questioned him, and at last allowed him to escape, on the express ground that he "guessed he wasn't a body of Dr. Dostie, an earnest, sincere, Federal soldier after all." This occurred in sight and hearing of at least one late
