PROSPECTUS.

THE increasing population, and reviving prosperity of our region, seem to require an additional means of information, and an earlier transmission of intelligence throughout our neighborhood than can be obtained through a weekly publication alone. While the physical resources of our region are rapidly developing themselves, the various branches of trade and industry daily increasing and spreading—the wants of our population in an intellectual point of view, must likewise be considered as extending proportionally and therefore with a view to keep pace with the spirit of improvement daily evinced, we have thought proper to issue proposals. And we cannot but believe that the growing importance of our region will fully sanction and sustain the same.
