PROSPECTUS. THE increasing population, and growing necessity of our citizens, to remain in an additional medium of information, and an earlier transmission of intelligence through our neighborhood than can be obtained through a weekly publication alone. While the physical resources of our region are rapidly developing themselves, the various branches of trade and industry daily increasing and expanding—the wants of our population in an intellectual point of view, must likewise be considered as extending proportionally, and therefore with a view to keep pace with the spirit of improvement daily evinced, we have thought proper to issue proposals. And we cannot but believe that the growing importance of our region will fully sanction and sustain the same.
