EVENTFUL DAY AT TABERNACLE

Hundreds Attend the Sunrise
Prayer Meeting--Many Converts Are Gained During the Four Services of the Day.

Sunday, September 24 will long be remembered as an eventful day in the religious history of Sayre. It is almost certain that no day in the history of the place has been so completely given to religious worship. At 6:30 an audience of nearly seven hundred people gathered for a sunrise service of prayer and conference and over two hundred people participated in the conference.

At 12 o'clock the various Sunday schools joined in a union service in the tabernacle. The audience of Bible students nearly filled the building, and at the close of the address by Rev. Rees scores of young people signified their purpose to begin a christian life.

At 3 o'clock the tabernacle was again filled with an audience of men. After a short praise service, in which nearly every man joined, Mrs. Rees sang the old song: "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight," the men joining in the chorus. The address followed. For nearly an hour the speaker spoke of the reasons why the men of Sayre are not christians, and the folly of allowing such reasons to hold them back from taking the noblest step man can take. An after meeting was held at the close of the service at which a number accepted Christ, and others gave testimony to the fact that the best that they had ever experienced had come to them since they came to Christ.

The day was fittingly closed by an evening service in which the building was filled to overflowing. The speaker chose for his text the words: "Is It Nothing to You?" In a strong and forceful appeal he showed the ingratitude of those who have so often been brought face to face with the claim that the Christ has upon their lives, and who so repeatedly refuse to recognize it. At this service a goodly number responded to the appeal and decided to become christians.

A TIGER AND HUGE TRUMPETER TOGETHER

Natural Enemies In Fearsome
Yet Friendly Feats.

When the Carl Hagenbeck circus and trained wild animal show—the only one of its kind on earth—comes to Sayre Wednesday, Sept. 27, among the thrilling and novel innovations it will offer will be found a mastodon Ceylon elephant and a monarchical bengal tiger in an equestrian act without precedent or equal, and who besides Carl Hagenbeck would have ever dreamed of combining such utterly incongruous and warring elements in such a feat, or could have compassed it with the mutual inherent fear and hatred of these animals for each other to contend with? Remembering, too, that the deadly enmity existing between them is intensified through the elephant being trained to hunt the tiger in its jungle haunts, no one can be blamed with accepting with incredulity the claim that they have at last been taught to socially cooperate in providing the public with a topnotch thriller, until he has seen it demonstrated. Hundreds and hundreds of thousands saw them do it at the St. Louis world's fair, and you will be afforded an equal chance to see them here—for Mr. Hagenbeck permits no promise made that is not fulfilled to the letter—and here is what will be brought before you:

Following the introduction of the elephant into the arena, the tiger's cage is thrown open and bounding lightly therefrom, with a mighty spring he lands on the elephant's back, where he poses in royally imposing and graceful fashion. The elephant then strides around the arena's circle, winding in and out between and around pedestals, over hurdles, etc. Next a platform is raised on one side of the tiger's cage, onto which he springs just before the elephant passes beneath it. Two large hoops covered with paper, and in circus parlance known as a balloons, are placed about twenty feet apart at equal distances between the platform and the opposite side of the cage. Then the elephant is sent at full speed around the arena, while the tiger leaps from the platform through one hoop onto a pedestal; from this pedestal through the second hoop onto the running elephant's back and thence again to the platform. Rings saturated with burning oil are substituted for the balloons, and through these burning zones the tiger, despite his natural dread of fire, fearlessly bounds to the back of his mastodon charger. These and other startling presentations make boasted champion circus acts look tame and time worn.
