Charged With Assault

Waverly—Mrs. Rosa Amick appeared before the police justice yesterday afternoon and asked for a warrant for the arrest of her husband, charging assault, third degree. Deputy Sheriff Tozer arrested the man at their home on Walker's hill, about two miles from this city. When the prisoner appeared before the justice a little later he was too much under the influence of liquor to have a hearing and was remanded to the city lockup for the night. This morning on arraignment before Justice Hoiland the prisoner entered a plea of guilty to the charge and was fined $3 and costs which were $5.65, or a total of $8.65, which he paid.

Interesting Meeting

Waverly—The W. C. T. U. held a very interesting meeting at their rooms on Broad street yesterday afternoon. The subject for discussion was "Scientific Temperance Instruction in Our Public Schools." A large number were present. For a number of years the union has furnished a publication to the public school teachers on the above subject and this work will be continued.

Waverly—By Rev. M. S. Godshall at the Methodist parsonage yesterday at noon, John Dibble of Mountain Lake, Pa., and Miss Mala Larabee of New Albany, Pa.

Among the Postmen

Judging from a cursory glance at the people we know, it would seem that the good clothes were as important factors in personal prosperity as integrity and intellect.

Bagpipes from Norway

It is a curious fact that bagpipes were invented in Norway and thence imported into Scotland in a period when a portion of the country fell into Scandinavian hands.

Rope from Seaweed

The largest plant in the world is probably a species of seaweed which often attains a length of 300 feet. The stems are dried and used as ropes by the South Sea Islanders.

Think It No Sin

Many a lady smuggles who would no more tip her ball into the better position at croquet than she would cut a throat or scuttle a ship—London Telegraph.

Youngest General

Probably the youngest general in the world is a nephew of the late shah of Persia, a boy not yet 14 years old. He holds the rank of a full general in the Persian army.

Queer Moth

In Germany a great deal of damage has been reported lately from the large moths which infest dairies and live on butter and milk.

A ROBIN ON THE THORN.

The frost is on the meadow, There is snow, and cold's the morn, But from the window I have seen A robin on the thorn.

Not yet a leaf on any tree, Nor ever grass blade green, But this dull day of winter A robin I have seen.

Perhaps his winter quarters In yonder thicket are; Perhaps he tarried here and thought The sunny south-side sky far.

When other birds went flying there He lingered here, I ween; On this dull day of winter A robin I have seen.

Oh brave the little fellow, He braved so bright and red, He strutted past the pane and cooed His small, defiant head.

First robin in the season, he First plumed the scene, As fearless as a brigadier, Full dauntless was his mien.

Oh robin, swift the coming Shall be of lovelier spring! Ere long in freedom thou wilt roam Will fit how many a wing!

But none of all the feathered host, Whene'er he tread the green, More beautiful as you, First robin I have seen.

This wintry day when northern May yet comes sweeping by, When storm and tempest rood aloft In mad and furious array, You've dared the chance of weather, You've braved the storm and rain, And I am less a coward for A robin I have seen.

Margaret E. Sawyer, in Everywhere

Also Got the House

ON May 1 last a young professional man and his wife, who had then just come to Washington from a western state to settle, rented a furnished house for the season. They expressly contracted for the whole plant and fixtures, from cellar to attic.

The owner of the furnished house—a club and guild woman of degree—held out for a good round rental. Her terms were accepted, the contract was signed, a sizeable bunch of the season's rental was paid in advance, and the young couple from the west, breathing sighs of relief, naturally figured that they had an outfit all their own till the cold weather began.

But they were wrong in their hand-capping figures. Three days after they were installed their landlady, all amiability and smiles as befitting the manner of a lady who frequently presides over woman's meetings of one sort or another, called in the afternoon, in the absence of the head of the house.

She was received by the young man's wife. They talked weather, ailments, cut-out the bias and pinto hat for a few moments, and then the landlady's eye suddenly—just as with apparent suddenness—fell upon a couple of small busts—Beethoven and Mozart—that rested upon ebony pedestals in the parlor.

"Oh, those dear busts!" she exclaimed, in a tone of passionate longing. "You cannot conceive how I miss them!"

HE HAD THE COUCH AND PILLOWS

—I do so dote on Baytoven particularly! Would it grieve you too much, my dear, if I were to ask you to let me have them for my room?"

The young mistress of the household was a bit taken back, but young matrons are easily hypnotized by elders of their sex, especially those who are so distinguished that they occasionally preside over women's meetings.

"Er—certainly, I can understand how one becomes attached to little articles of that sort—take them, by all means," she replied, wondering what her husband would say when he discovered the absence of the busts.

"Thank you so much, my dear—I'll send a man for them this very afternoon," said the landlady, rising and taking an effusive departure.

An hour later a man with a pushcart hove to alongside the curb in front of the house, and when he got under way again he had the busts of Beethoven and Mozart, with their pedestals, in the hold of his craft.

"Hub!" was all that the young matron's husband said when, upon his return that evening, she told him about the absentee busts.

Five days later the landlady called again, bubbling over with good spirits and cheerfulness. After a few moments of breezy conversation, she got an eye-focus on a leather couch in the sitting room, with four or five couch pillows banked upon the same.

"It is silly of me, my dear, I know," she ejaculated, "but do you know that I miss that couch dreadfully! I used to always lie down on it for an hour after luncheon, and I found it so restful! Would you think it—er—covelous of me, my dear, if I should ask you to let me have it for my room?"

"Why—er—ah—if—er—" the young mistress of the household began weakly, when she was impaled by the landlady's eagle eye.

"I am sure I should not object myself," she went on, "but my husband, who has been quite attached to the couch and when he comes in, all tired out, he likes to—er—I'll tell him—"

"So kind of you, my dear—your husband will not object, I know—he is so agreeable," interrupted the landlady, effusively. "It makes an old woman like me feel quite envious to see how happy you two are together. Indeed it does! Very well, I shall send for the couch this afternoon and please do not let the man who comes to fetch the pillows, there's a dear."

Whereupon she rose, pressed the young matron's hand fervently, and was off. Half an hour later the push-cart man came up four bells, under a full head of steam and forced draught, and when he pointed down street again he had the couch and pillows properly stowed amidships.

"Why, what a become of the lounge?" inquired the head of the house when, after dinner that evening, he was ready to stretch himself out for a bit of a smoke. His wife told him. He looked at her quite fixedly.

"My dear," said he, "you're developing into more different kinds of a come-on, a mark, and a good thing than you ever were before. Get contiguous to yourself, my dear. Practice the frozen countenance a little more, even if you do have to abandon some of the delectable. I was very fond of that couch. I sura was."

About a week later the landlady showed up again. "I do hope she won't be wanting anything this time!" fervently said the young matron to herself when the servant brought her the card.

The landlady was as glibly giddily amiable and affectionate as upon her previous visits. After expatiating at considerable length upon sundry and divers topics of the day, she had a sudden rethink.

"Oh, my dear, I know there was something I wanted to ask you," she explained, her crafty countenance wrinkling with benign smiles. "That piano lamp—funt it a lovely one?—presented to me for being the most popular lady of my guild. I do miss it so much! It sheds such a soft, mellow glow, don't you think? And I'm going to have a small midsummer musicale in my teeny teeny rooms the first cool night, and I'd be so much obliged to you if you could let me have it for a couple of weeks."

"But I fear that my husband—he plays, you know, might—er—he is so particular about the little things around the house, you know—and he might—er—"

"—was the weak reply of the young matron of the household. "Oh, I am perfectly sure he would not mind," interrupted the landlady, off-hand, in her confident way. "Why, he is the most delightfully agreeable man—I declare, I have quite fallen in love with him! Very well, then, my dear, I shall send the man for it this afternoon."

Then the landlady, giving the young matron's hand the most fetching, fascinating little squeeze imaginable, took her leave.

"Well, she's been here again," said the young wife to her husband when he came in. "Who's that?" he inquired. "Why, the landlady," said his wife. "And what did she swipe this time?" he asked her.

"The piano lamp," was the reply. "The young professional man is a self-contained individual, but this time he was too hot for utterance. So he put on his hat and coat and went out into the air for the purpose of permitting sundry and divers thoughts to percolate the better through his skull in the open."

The next morning at 11 o'clock a big moving van pulled up in front of the house. The young professional man was waiting for it. His wife was not. He had the piano and the piano stool loaded into the van and ordered the man in charge of the wagon to take them to the landlady's address. He gave the man a note to deliver to the landlady. The note ran thus:

"Respected Madam: I am naturally of a warm, generous disposition, and I cannot bear to think of your having your piano lamp without the piano and stool that go with same. So I am sending them to you. Please do not embarrass or confuse me with words of thanks. The pleasure is mine. I assure you."

"P. S.—By the way, your house is at your disposal. I am going to change my address to-day if I can find an unfurnished house that suits. With great respect, etc., etc."

The young professional man and his wife are now occupying a flat that they rented unfurnished, and are buying their furniture on the excitement plan.—Washington Star.

Dignity of the Bench

The federal bench holds some of the greatest lawyers in the country, and not a member of that bench draws a salary which is equal to the individual earnings of thousands of lawyers whose names are unknown beyond their own bailiwicks. This is a condition, says the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, which has existed from the foundation of the government and it is to be hoped that it will always exist. There is no manner by which the judiciary and other branches of public service could be more cheapened and degraded than by making the emoluments of office so attractive that the offices would be sought merely for the pay which goes with them.

Ancient Painting

The oldest painting in Europe has just been discovered in Crete. It is on a sarcophagus and is supposed to date back to 2500 B. C. It was recently unearthed by the Italian archaeological mission.
