MURDER FADES INTO FIGHT

Police Called Out Late Saturday Night on a False Alarm at Smith's Boarding House; Find A Little Something Doing.

"Murder! fire! police! help!" shrieked a frightened girl who hurried through the streets in search of the police late Saturday night. She found the officers all in a bunch and took them to Smith's boarding house on Desmond street, where she said foul murder was being done. And there was a pretty little scrap.

The minions of the law arrived too late to stop the row but in time to catch the man who got the worst of it and to hear about seventeen different stories of how it happened. The man who did the thrashing jumped out of a window but was captured later when he returned to the house. He certainly did a fine job, for the victim had two black eyes and numerous other contusions dealt by fist and foot and the stairs down which he fell.

John Jones, the victor, said that he came up to his room on the second floor and found John Smith, the victim, and a girl there, and that Smith jostled against him and smashed his new hat. Then Jones dug in.

Smith's story is that he returned from a shopping expedition with Mrs. Smith and her daughter and found Jones and a girl there. He said "Hello" to the girl and got licked for it, he says.

Justice Murray heard the case late that night and imposed a fine of $5.00 and costs.
