The Passing of a Monarch

Athens—The old tree on Ferry street that has stood as a sentinel to the W. O. Robinson house has lost one half its glory. Yesterday's gale parted the trunk in the middle and one half of it fell into the street. The writer has witnessed the growth of this tree from a sapling. One of the old pilots who ran the rafts of lumber down the river walked all the way home from tidewater and used this sappling for a walking stick, which he stuck into the ground when he arrived home, and it took root and grew.
