CRONSTADT BURNS

Mutiny Starts Close to the Czar's Capital.

CONVICT SAILORS LEAD REVOLT

Capture a Steamer and Hoist the Red Flag.

IRONFISTED TREPPOFF RESIGNS.

Mutineers to the Number of Three Thousand in Battle With Troops at Baltic Sea Stronghold—Two Hundred Shot Down—Machine Guns in Action—Reflection of Burning Town Seen From Emperor's Palace at Peterhof.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 10.—The naval and military fortress of Cronstadt, twenty miles east of the capital, is in the hands of mutineers. Many of the sailors there have revolted, overpowered the officers and many persons are reported to have been killed.

The mutineers set fire to the town, a dense pall of smoke hangs over it and the dull glow of fire is seen through the falling snow. Eight government military depots are aflame. It is impossible for anybody to enter the town. The telegraph poles on the line to St. Petersburg have been cut down for a distance of four miles outside the town, so that telegraphic communication is cut off, and the telephone has also ceased to work.

The last event which is known to have taken place before communication with the fortress was severed was the arrival at Cronstadt of a boat from St. Petersburg with 150 sailors who had been arrested during the riots in the capital last week.

General Trepoff has resigned the governorship of St. Petersburg and his last official act as chief of police was to collect these 150 sailors from various St. Petersburg jails and send them under arrest to the naval authorities at Cronstadt.

They were loaded on a steambot, which started for the fortress. On the way the sailors overpowered the crew and took control of the boat, which arrived at Cronstadt flying a red flag.

The emblem of revolution was seen from shore, and a mass of soldiers and sailors assembled to welcome the mutineers. Two hours later the town and fortress were entirely in their possession.

All the sailors in the place and on the warships there are reported to have joined the mutiny. The officers, with the help of troops stationed there for just such an emergency, made a desperate resistance. They fought the mutineers in the streets, and many were killed and wounded.

The sailors plundered the government spirit depots. They secured several machine guns, which they used against the troops. The inhabitants of the town have fled and desperate fighting is reported.

Hundreds of women and children took refuge on the last steambot that left the place. The warships have been ordered out of the harbor, and troops have been sent from St. Petersburg to restore order.

The heavens reflected the glare of smoldering fires at Cronstadt last night. The outbreak started when the sailors of the "seventh fort equipage" revolted, and it is rumored, killed some of their officers. They marched out of the barracks and immediately plundered four spirit shops. Crazed with liquor, they returned and seized their arms and then went on the rampage, firing promiscuously upon the troops and the loyal sailors. Later they were joined by many of their comrades, and fighting continued from midnight until morning. The lowest estimates place the number of dead at fifty.

During the rioting machine guns were employed against the mutinous sailors, who had been joined by a battalion of artillerymen from the fortress and which raised the total number of mutineers to 3,000. It is difficult to ascertain the number of casualties, but officers place the figures at 200. Many wounded persons are in hospitals. The sailors say their chief grievances are poor food and clothing and an insufficient amount of liberty from barracks.

Many of the mutineers have surrendered, but several hundred are still holding out in the eastern section of the town. They have thrown up barricades, but are surrounded, and machine guns are posted at all the streets leading to their stronghold. It is expected that the remainder of the mutineers will submit.

It is semi-officially stated here that the czar is about to grant autonomy to Poland. The resignation of General Trepoff is officially announced. Trepoff has left St. Petersburg to assume the office of governor of the imperial palace at Peterhof.

No successor to Trepoff has been appointed in the office of minister of police for the empire, which has been abolished.

The Grand Duke Nicholas has been appointed to the military command of the capital.

NEW YORK BALLOT BOXES.

Authorities at Loggerheads as to Duty in Election Contest.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—Stirring incidents came thick and fast here following the order issued by Justice Gaynor directing the police to turn over all the ballot boxes to the board of elections pending the contest made by William H. Hearst against the election of Mayor McEllan. The order to forward the ballot boxes was sent over the wires to the police captain after midnight, and soon policemen and patrol wagons were on their way to the offices of the board of elections and those of the Brooklyn local board. There was no person in either office to receive them, and a long and dreary wait followed.

The Brooklyn police were more lucky than their Manhattan brethren, for some finally were allowed to place their boxes in the building. President Voorhis of the board of elections refused absolutely to receive the boxes. He said that under the law the boxes should remain in the hands of the police until they were wanted by the board of canvassers. All the protestations of the Hearst men availed nothing, for President Voorhis said that he would not touch the boxes until he had received the advice of the corporation counsel.

The Hearst men declared that forty-five of the boxes in the street in front of the building showed signs of having been tampered with. The seals of many of them were broken, they said.

Throughout the day the street in front of the bureau of elections was practically blocked to traffic. A special squad of policemen, mounted and on foot, was called out. To add to the trouble one of the horses attached to a wagon loaded with ballot boxes ran away at noon. Three boxes were thrown out, and one was smashed to pieces. Ballots were scattered over the street. These were finally gathered up in a box, and a policeman was specially detailed to guard them.

After a consultation with the corporation counsel President Voorhis announced that he would have the ballot boxes placed in armories, with possibly a guard of soldiers.

Parker to Aid McEllan. NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—Mayor McEllan, as a result of the growing agitation resulting from W. H. Hearst's demand for a recount of the votes cast Tuesday, has taken steps to defend himself. Alton B. Parker, former candidate for president, will be one of his special counsel.

APPEALS TO PRESIDENT.

Simon Wolf of B'nai Brith Asked Aid For Russian Jews. WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Simon Wolf, former president of the B'nai Brith, has sent the following appeal to President Roosevelt:

"The man that sidetracked precedents by ending the coal strike, the man that conjured between Russia and Japan and who has in a hundred ways showed marvelous versatility and courage can he not take the initiative and bring about concert of action to stem the cruelities in Russia? How long is this ghostly, ghastly holocaust to continue?"

Mr. Wolf is now heading a movement to raise funds for the relief of the stricken Jews in Russia pending any action that may be taken by the United States or other nations of the world. He points out that 25,000 Jews have been killed and 100,000 have been injured during the recent massacres in Russia.

"We have got to raise millions of dollars in this country and Europe," said Mr. Wolf. "The situation is acute and calls for our best and strongest efforts to succor the persecuted Jews in the land of the czar."

Willard at Cornell.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 10.—King Edward's birthday anniversary was observed by an address to the student body by E. S. Willard, the English actor. Mr. Willard gave the students sound advice, saying that whether they are winning in football or pursuing their studies earnestness is the first requirement. In regard to the theater he advocated the rooting of vulgarity and the portrayal of vice, which, he said, is too often encouraged because it is passed off with a smile and sometimes is even applauded. Too much seriousness, he said, was also bad for the theater.

BALFOUR SAYS PEACE

Guildhall Banquet at London Historic Event.

ROOSEVELT AS WORLD'S PEACEMAKER

Ambassador From United States Favored Court of Arbitration Rather Than an Appeal to the Sword.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—"A century ago Pitt, standing where I now stand, prophesied war. I prophesy peace." This was the text on which Premier Balfour based his speech concerning the relations of Great Britain with foreign countries at the lord mayor's banquet in the Guildhall last night, an occasion when custom makes it almost imperative for either the premier or the foreign secretary to discuss the foreign and domestic policies of the British government.

Mr. Balfour and Whitelaw Reid, the American ambassador, who replied to the toast of "Their Excellencies, the Foreign Ministers," proposed by the lord mayor, vied with each other in pleasant words for the credit of their respective countries' leaders among the advocates of the arbitration of quarrels throughout the civilized world. In fact, the whole tenor of the speeches was optimistic so far as the relations between all the great powers were concerned. The premier's reference to Russia was particularly happy.

"Our friends in Russia are absorbing public interest by the great movement they are making in the direction, as we believe, of self government. The task of the emperor and his advisers is indeed not a light one, and those who for centuries have practiced parliamentary government know best the difficulties which confront them. There is not a citizen in Great Britain who does not wish them every success, and I express the earnest wish that the movement may not in the future be strained by the unnecessary effusion of blood. We hope that the movement will bring happiness to countless millions, unassailed by a repetition of the painful and horrible events which made the initial progress so lamentable."

The banquet was conducted with all the quiet ceremonial peculiar to the occasion. The guests of Lord Mayor Morgan included the retiring lord mayor, Sir John Pount, and Premier Balfour as guests of honor; Ambassador Reid and Viscount Hayashi, the Japanese minister, who were given a splendid reception by the assembled guests.

In proposing the toast of "The Imperial Forces" Sheriff Smallman pleasantly referred to the reception in the United States of the British squadron under command of Prince Louis of Battenberg.

Ambassador Reid in the beginning of his speech referred to Viscount Hayashi as "the new ambassador" and said he should have been selected to respond to the toast to the representatives of foreign nations because of his well known eloquence and also because he was more capable of doing justice to the subject. Referring to the premier's expressions concerning the probabilities of peace, Mr. Reid said it was the business of diplomats to make peace and not war, and for his part he preferred the court of arbitration to the arbitration of the sword. The ambassador said he would neither concede nor dispute Mr. Balfour's claim that Great Britain had taken precedence in the matter of arbitration, but he would say that Great Britain and the United States had set an example and had settled some of the most burning questions through arbitration and that today the two countries were more cordial in their relations than they had been at any time in the last hundred years.

"If you hear of the possibility of difficulties over fisheries or something else, don't believe it," said the ambassador, "because such a report will be the result of absolute misinformation. There is no question today between the United States and Great Britain that Secretary Root and Secretary Lansing cannot speedily settle, and while King Edward and President Roosevelt retain their places there is sure to be a continuance of good relations."

Mr. Reid closed with a tribute to the action of President Roosevelt in bringing about peace between Russia and Japan and said that King Edward was known throughout the United States as an earnest advocate of peace, whose tact and moderation had endeared him to every citizen of the republic.

BATTENBERG IS BUSY

British Admiral-Prince Feted at New York.

HEART TO HEART TALK TO NEWSMEN

Entertained by General Grant on Governors Island and at Navy Yard by Admiral Coghlan.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—From the time his squadron anchored in the North river Prince Louis of Battenberg has been kept busy making and returning official calls. Prince Louis' programme included visits to Rear Admiral Coghlan at the Brooklyn navy yard, to Mayor McEllan at the city hall, to General Grant at Governors Island and the reception of return visits aboard the Drake.

The prince was the guest of Brigadier General Grant at an elaborate luncheon at Governors Island. Later he attended a large reception at the navy yard, and in the evening with 250 officers of the two fleets, he will be the honored guest at a dinner of the Naval Academy Alumni association.

Previous to the departure for the navy yard and following the visits of the American admirals and Sir Percy Sanderson the prince received a delegation of newspaper men in the wardroom of the Drake. No distinguished Englishman who ever visited these shores was more genial and to all appearances more democratic. His bearing, while distinguished, was entirely simple and unaffected, and he talked with a straightforward frankness that won the hearts of his hearers. Physically the prince looked a man of average size and strength. He stood erect and sat gracefully. In facial appearance he looks not unlike his royal uncle, the king.

Prince Louis spoke in warmest terms of President Roosevelt and declared that the president reminded him from a personal point of view of King Edward. The prince said:

"The last time I came to New York I came as a midshipman, thirty-three years ago, in search of amusement, and I got it. This time I am very anxious to have the fact impressed that I come here as an admiral in command of a squadron and not as a prince. I hold the fact of my own personality second in importance. I am more proud of the uniform I wear and the flag which I represent than anything else."

"Today we celebrate the king's birthday, and I wish to express my appreciation of the event that the American squadron is doing the same thing. The moment I arrived I broke out the royal standard in honor of the day, and the Maine at once fired a salute of twenty-one guns. Then, much to my surprise and pleasure, Admiral Evans and his staff came on board to congratulate me on the king's birthday."

"During my three days' visit in Washington I had an interview each day with the president. It would be impertinent of me to express any opinion of such a great man, but I will say that I never met anybody with whom I could compare him and took great satisfaction in making his acquaintance."

"He is so many sided and knows so much about every conceivable subject that a conversation with him is both illuminating and instructive as well as being an honor. I should say, if you wish me to make a comparison, that he possesses in the personal relation the same magnetic charm which our king possesses."

"I have conveyed informally the best wishes of the king to the president, and the president has charged me to perform a similar duty to his majesty when I arrive home."

Sorrow For Midshipman's Sad End. WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—James B. Branch of New York, father of Midshipman Branch, accompanied by his sister, called on President Roosevelt. The president, who has known Mr. Branch for a long time, condoled with him over the unfortunate death of his son. It is stated that Mr. Branch did not call on the president to urge an investigation by the naval authorities into the death of his son. Mr. Branch and his sister then called on Secretary Bonaparte at the navy department. The secretary expressed his deep sympathy at their loss.
