Oh, the sallor men! And the marines! And the petty officers! Oh, the shore-leave taking! The sea is a salty, thirsty place, anyhow. Those who follow it have need of refreshment when they arrive. The British tars will find no lack of it. Every sailor in the home fleet has saved his pocket money for more than a month to make a big entertainment fund. The fact caused a panic on the Bowery owing to a curious misconception. The North Atlantic squadron was here a few weeks ago. Saloonkeepers set out their worst and prepared for business. There was nothing doing. The sailors came ashore as usual, but did not care for red liquor. They drank beer or nothing and a good deal of the latter. The publicans were consoled when they learned that it didn't mean total abstinence pledges. Mottoes, Fancy Lace Paper Doilies, hand for the British visitors. The money is on hand, never fear-thousands of it. The officers will entertain the officers. But the 'tween-decks men are not going to be neglected.

A World-Encireling Drunk.
HIS is the last act of a world-encircline drunk that may be of the makings of history. First the British fleet chan-nel sailed into in convenience the palaces of Paris and

Then the British fleet salled into the Baltic-with a chip on its shoulder, if the truth were known- play have no greater art value than and the German emperor ordered return courtesies at Swinemunde. Meanwhile an American fleet sailed for France to bring home the body of John Paul Jones. Nothing was too good for the man-o'-war's man ashore. "My, what a system!" as the admiring book agent said who had been kicked from floor to floor of a 17-story building. Did a sailor man take too much absinthe, in the delusion that it was a light wine? N' importel He was arrested; of a verity yes, M'sieu'. But he was safe. If early in the visit he was sobered up and released. If later he was kept and handed over with smiles just as the detachment was leaving. Such politeness, such consideration! A baby couldn't have been safer in a nursery.

So New York has a reputation to sustain, as well as the sailor men. Here are to be nearly 10,000 lusty enlisted men ashore, not presumably all at once. The town is following the spirit of the sign I used to see on a Broadway cafe? "Walk in, and Billy Will Use You Well." The magistrates are taking lessons in French and Gal-iic politeness. The police have instructions to be not too observant. And
