Colonel Retains His Title Against the Emperor's Order. BERLIN, Feb. S .- A novel case turn colonel has just ended in the Berlin courts, a well known military correspondent, Colonel Gaedke, being the defendant. Gaedke had been for some years on the retired list and became military critic of the Tageblatt, for which paper he wrote certain things which displeased the military authorities. The latter summoned Gaedke before a court of honor, which decided that be had forfeited his right to use the title of colonel and to wear an officer's uniform. The basis of this decision was that the emperor two years ago issued an order in this sense, Gaedke being then in Manchuria.

Upon his return Gaedke continued to use the title and wear the uniform en the ground that the court of honor was without legal competency. Gaedhe then tried through sharp criticism to compel the war department to bring a suit against him for using the title illegally; but, failing therein, he denounced himself to a civil court for unlawfully using the title.

The trial attracted much attention owing to the novel features and ended in the prosecuting attorney asking that a month's arrest be imposed on thus overruling the emperor's order.
