CHAMPLIN STOCK COMPANY

Chas. K. Champlin, rightly named "the man who wins them all," who heads his big stock company of twenty five people, will be the attraction at the Loomis Thursday, March 8, matinee and night. This season Mr. Champlin will appear in an entire new repertoire of high class royalty plays. In every city where he has appeared this season he has been accorded the highest praise by critics. The vaudeville features with the Champlin show are the strongest that can be secured. They include the famous La Tour sisters, the greatest sister act in vaudeville; Master Arthur Grant, the champion of all buck dancers; Lester brothers, champion acrobats and hand balancers; Lulu Morrison in beautiful picture dance, and Harry McKee, the most wonderful lightning change artist in the world.

WAVERLY

They certainly made a pleasant surprise. "I can't bear the smell of smoke on a journey."

"Of course, there are circumstances in which it might not be unpleasant. When I was younger I didn't mind."

She transferred the smile to the old gentleman. Trevoe concluded, with some uneasiness, that she was a sentimental person and therefore given to theorizing. He met the girl's eyes. They exchanged glances and seemed to understand one another.

"Do you find these long journeys tiring?" the old lady asked Trevoe.

"Sometimes. It depends so much on one's fellow travelers."

"The girl had her eyes fixed dreamily on the passing landscape."

"There are occasions when I could travel on and on and never realize that time was passing," he said.

"Yes," she murmured. "We can remember such a time, can't we?" she asked.

"You mean, I suppose, when we were first married?"

"Of course," she said, glancing toward the girl's gloved hands.

The girl understood at once that she was being taken for a young wife. She was so much amused that she had to make a pretense of getting something from the luggage rack.

The old lady watched furtively, but with such evident interest that even Trevoe's masculine mind jumped to the meaning of it. When the hand was disclosed it had no marriage sign upon it, but the third finger bore a ring which might very well represent engagement.

The inquisitive old lady sighed, as though to suggest a kindly warning against a long continuance of that state of affairs.

The girl slid the ring up and down upon her finger.

"There's no risk of losing it now?" Trevoe asked.

"Oh, no," she said, with an upward glance that really thrilled him. She certainly, he thought, acted uncommonly well.

The train shot into a tunnel.

"Are we going to keep this up?" he whispered. "If we drop it now the old lady'll think we've been fooling her."

"Why should we drop it?"

"All right. My name's Jack."

"Mine's Jessie."

To Trevoe, after this compact, the position became delightful, and the girl called Jessie appeared to enjoy it no less. The old lady became more and more confidential and gradually drew her husband into the talk.

TRACTION COMPANY ASKS FOR RELEASE

Waverly—Hampered on every side, the new South Waverly trolley line hangs on the decision of the meeting of the Waverly board of trustees, March 16.

Attorney Hawkes appeared for the Traction Company at Saturday night's meeting, asking that a release be given from the terms of the franchise granted Sept. 13th in regard to Spalding, Erie and Wilcox streets, and that the company be allowed to abandon them. He stated that the consent of the majority of the taxpayers could not be secured, and that the injunction at Sayre made it impracticable to build on the above streets.

If the request is not granted, the company will forfeit a bond of $500 and their franchise in Elmira street. If the request is granted, the road from Keystone avenue to Broad street will be operated in a very short time, benefitting both the residents of South Waverly and business men of Waverly.

BISHOP TALBOT VISITS SAYRE

Large Audience Listens to Gifted Man's Sermon--Arrangements Made for Services at Church of Redeemer Until Rector Is Secured

The visit of a bishop is always an event that is looked forward to with great interest by Episcopalian's, and the coming of the Right Rev. Ethelbert Talbot to this parish brought out a large attendance last evening at the Church of the Redeemer. Though the bishop had visited Trinity church at Athens yesterday morning, where he had confirmed a large class, yet many of the Athenians were present at the services here last night. Bishop Talbot delivered one of the strong, earnest sermons for which he is noted.

It was announced during the services that the Bishop would arrange for services to be held in the Church of the Redeemer until the parish should secure a rector. As a result of the kind offices of the bishop Rev. W. E. Daw of Athens will hold evening services on next Thursday evening and every second Thursday evening thereafter. On each alternate Thursday evening thereafter Rev. E. A. Germain of Towanda will conduct the services. Bishop Talbot stated that he would see that a minister was supplied for the Sunday services, and it is very probable that the Rev. Mr. Tollman of Bethlehem will supply until the parish engages a rector.

"COME BY ALL MEANS"

looked in and passed; even the old ladies made the journey and retired with pained superiority. Trevoe and his companion observed this with delight.

"We seem to be creating a sensation," he said. "Do you mind?"

"Not in the least. But this isn't a smoking carriage, you know; I told you that. We're breaking rules."

At Exeter an elderly couple were conveyed across the crowded platform by an assiduous porter and left in the compartment which had hitherto been sacred to Trevoe and his charming acquaintance. "They assumed an air of pensive resignation, but the newcomers did not appear to observe it. The lady sniffed suspiciously and glanced to right and left for indications.

"Is this a smoking compartment?" she asked Trevoe, whose pipe was safely out of sight.

"Oh, no," he said; "the smoker's next door."

"Then I suppose it must have leaked through."

"No doubt," he said; "these carriages are shockingly made."

The old lady was mollified. She smiled benignly upon Trevoe and the spl. whose name he did not know.
