AERONAUT'S PERILOUS FLIGHT IN A BALLOON.

Frenchman Runs Into Storm During Aerial Trip in New York, But Lands in Safety.

New York.—After a perilous trip through space, at the mercy of a storm thousands of feet above the earth, Charles Levee, a French aeronaut, returned to New York and related a thrilling experience that had come to him from the time of his ascent one afternoon recently at West Point until he reached Terra firma the next night near Kingston.

The daring Frenchman said that the experience was the most perilous he had ever had. Mr. Levee said: "Had it not been for the storm which I encountered, and which almost brought an end to my trip through the air, I would have gone far into the interior of the mountains. If the wind had held there would have been no trouble, but when I was sailing smoothly along a storm came dead ahead.

"I BEGAN TO SHOUT."

"The moon was shining and gave me plenty of light. Suddenly the clouds seemed to pour down upon me. They enveloped the balloon and shut out the light of the moon when I was several thousand feet up. The velocity of the wind was something terrific. I had absolutely no means of knowing which way I was going."

"The temperature must have dropped to the zero point in a few seconds. I realized my danger if I did not find a landing place before my equilibrium—upset in the adjustment of the gas ballast—was restored. Despite the fact that I was being carried with the wind at frightful speed, there was no sensation of rushing through the air. I realized I was traveling at too great a speed to make a safe landing unless I could discern a stretch of smooth land."

"After I had almost become blind in my endeavor to locate something on the earth I sighted a light. It was just a mere speck, but I knew it was a habitation and I allowed the balloon to settle gradually. As I neared the earth in the direction of this light I began to shout, but the roar of the wind drowned my voice."

"Less than 100 feet above the earth I could make out nothing except an inky blur. Then I ripped the balloon wide open. Then I judge I was about 20 feet from the ground, and my fall was not hard. The anchor also had caught on a stone, and I was saved from being dragged along the ground."

Levee landed in a field back of the farmhouse of the Dewitts. The farmer answered his calls for help and aided him in untangling his balloon and helped him remain in their home until morning."

Maddened Animal Delays an Express Train and Bouts Woman at Wakefield, Mass.

Wakefield, Mass.—A maddened steer escaped from a slaughter-house in Lynnfield, endangering the lives of several persons, delayed an express train, and cleared Wakefield streets of pedestrians.

The police and half a hundred men and boys, armed with guns and revolvers, pursued the infuriated animal two miles and discharged their weapons at frequent intervals, but the steer was not killed until the chase reached Melrose Highlands.

When the steer, puffing and bellowing, made its appearance in the streets, women shrieked and fled to the nearest buildings. Several men were chased by the steer, and one young man on a bicycle was forced onto the Boston & Maine railroad tracks.

An express train was brought nearly to a standstill by the engineer in order to avoid an accident. A helper employed at the slaughter-house was knocked down by the animal and bruised.

Owes Life to a Dream. Louisville.—That a dream saved his life is the firm conviction of W. W. Herr, an engineer on the Louisville & Nashville railroad. Just before dawn one morning recently Herr in his sleep saw two trains dash together, and then the scene of disaster shifted to a cemetery in which there was a long row of tombstones, each of which bore the name "W. W. Herr." He immediately obtained a leave of absence for 28 days. Peter Murphy, who was given Herr's run, was killed in the head-on collision two weeks later, and Herr reported for work, believing that the dream had "run out."

"THE VILLAGE FOOL"

This new rural comedy which will be seen at the Loomis tomorrow evening is an original, not an imitation. A prominent writer says it draws sap from the rich soil of our own social life. It breathes the very soul of our thoughts, our transgressions, our ambitions, our sufferings, and our aspirations.

The tale is alive with interest, the plot is well knit and cleverly developed. The dialogue is varied and full of animation. The characters are drawn as they should be drawn in drama, in the rough; by point, touch and turn of speech; by flash of thought, passion and incident. The actors aim to make live in the flesh what the author has indicated rather than portrayed in the lines.

The whole piece, indeed, is so harmoniously brought through its several stages of action to climax and close, so relieved by alternating rays, of action, humor and pathos so varied with the griefs and joys of the life we lead, the element in fact, are so mixed in it that Mr. Owen may well stand up and say: "This is a rural comedy indeed." It is high praise, perhaps, to bestow, but the play reminds us most strongly of our American painting at the world's fair.

There is nothing in it, absolutely nothing, to offend the most critical taste of either moralist or artist, and yet it touches human life at all points with the spirit which feels the difference between realism and sensuality. There is throughout a healthy and refined moral tone and that eminently practical sanity which we may proudly say has always characterized American literature. The play and the actors are finely adapted to each other.
