During the completion of the general debate on the legislative bill Mr. Grosvenor (O.) came to the defense of the army in the Mount Dajo battle and was replied to briefly by Mr. Williams, the minority leader, who asserted that all criticism was based on the official reports so far received.

Regarding the battle of Mount Dajo. near Jolo, Mr. Grosvenor, defending the army, said: "This gang of Moros belongs to a class of pirates and professional thieves. They were an organized hand of murderers who never surrender, but fight until the last one of them is dead."

In answer to the recent criticism of Mr. Jones (Va.) that the mountain should have been surrounded and the Mores starved into surrender Mr. Grosvenor remarked that Mr. Jones was a farmer by profession; that the mountain was fifteen miles around, making this sort of a slege impossible. There was but one way to get them out, and that was exactly the plan the American soldier executed, and the president was exactly right when he telegraphed it was a significant feat of Admiral Chouknin Granted Schmidt Privilege of Dying by Ride Bullets Rather Than Disgrace of Being Hanged.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 20. -Former Lieutenant Schmidt, who com-manded the vessels of the Black sea fleet which mutialed and opened fire on the city of Sevastopol with the guns of the fleet, was shot at Otchakoff with three of his sailors.

Schmidt was known at the time of the mutiny as the "Red Admiral" on account of his flying the red flag at the masthend

The mutiny of 4,000 sailors at Sevastopol, complicated with a general strike of employees of the post and telegraph services, broke out in November last. Schmidt, who had been dismissed from the navy because of his revolutionary oplaions, went on board the cruiser Otchakoff and assumed command of that vessel and of the other mutinous of the Black sea fleet and a regiment of infantry then attempted to selze the city. The ships opened fire on the forts, which replied, sinking the cruisers Otchakoff and Dpeiper and a transport. Schmidt was captured. The seven remaining ships surrendered to the loyal warships of Admiral Chouknin, and the regiment which had revolted was forced to surrender. The casualties were estimated at 5,000. Schmidt was tried by a military and naval court martial with thirty-seven sailors of the Otchakoff's crew, the charge against them being participation in the movement to overthrow the government and of active armed resistance to the authorities. In addition. Schmidt was charged with activity since his youth in revolutionary circles, taking command of mutinous ships, telegraphing insolently to the emperor and ordering the satiors to open fire on forts and ships. A plea of insanity was entered in Schmidt's behalf, but the court found a verdict of guilty and sentenced him to be of imprisonment. In addressing the court before sen tence was passed upon bim Schmidt said that he believed the gullows ou which he died would mark the separation of the old, slavish Russia from the new, free Russia. "If," he said, "I could buy Russian freedom with the most terrible death I would die smiling." Appeals for clemency were set Mrs. Bessie Hollister, took the stand aside, but Admiral Chouknin granted in his own behalf. He denied that he to Schmidt the privilege of being shot

Fire at Training School Develops Courage and Pluck.

INSTRUCTOR BURNED IN RESCUE.

foung Gordon Entered the Burning Building Risking His Life to Save Miss Merrill, a Teacher Overcome by Smoke.

HAVERHILL, Mass., March 20.

The names of heroes will be written in Haverhill's school history as a result of schoolhouse fire in which the lives of over 150 pupils were imperiled. One girl was injured by jumping, and several other students as well as two teachers were slightly burned in the ush from the quick spreading flames, but all the others escaped in safety. The fire destroyed the Manual Train ing school building in which it started and partly burned an annex structure. known as the Whittier High school, ar historic place, in which the poet Whittier once taught. All the seven teachers in the two schools demonstrated re markable coolness, but the heroism of two persons. Walter Bourne, an instructor in manual training, and Francis Gorman, a fifteen-year-old member of the freshman class, was especially notable.

Bourne guided twelve boys through a wall of fire and smoke which threatened to imprison them in the training school and then returned to assure him self that all had escaped. His retreat was cut off, and he was forced to ump from a second story window. His face was scorched and his hair burned off. #

All the students in the annex escaped down the stairway except seven girls, who rushed to a balcony overlooking the street. One jumped, receiving slight injuries, and the others were removed on ladders.

Smoke overcame Miss Sue Merrill, one of the teachers in the annex when she returned to recover personal property. At the risk of his own life Gorman dashed into the burning building in carrying the teacher into the open air. Both were burned about the head. The fire loss was $25,000.
