ANNIVERSARY OF LEE'S SURRENDER

Forty-one Years Ago Today Marked the Fall of Southern Confederacy

Forty-one years ago today witnessed the final collapse of the great rebellion and the surrender of General Lee's army. Time does not dim the memory of that event to the Union soldier who was present and felt the unrestrained enthusiasm of victory. General Phil Sheridan after giving Jubal Early his final polishing off in the valley was made chief in command of the force to make a detour around Petersburg and strike the south side of Danville railroads to cut off the supplies to the rebel army from Richmond. As they reached Dinwiddie Court House a deluge of rain came down and a company of officers took refuge in Widow Crump's hospital mansion, where they sang rebel songs with the young ladies until a late hour when they bid them good bye in the following poetic strain: "Good bye girls—if we don't get shot we'll come back—otherwise not." Reaching Five Forks the cavalry rode into the works and captured 6,000 prisoners. General Pickett was holding the works and while trying his best to resist the attack a Yankee cavalryman astride a mule jumped over the works and ordered him to surrender. Greece saved Rome in ancient times and a mule was the first in the death struggle of the rebellion. From here the grand army made such rapid and destructive work that the roads were strewn with the dead. At one place a Confederate soldier was kneeling by the body of a fallen comrade with his hands uplifted as in prayer. A Union soldier approached him to accept his surrender or to give succor if wounded, but he was shocked to find him dead. Lee expected to hold the army in check until he could escape to Lynchburg, and then he hoped to maintain guerrilla warfare until he could get favorable terms, but he found himself cut off and the surrender followed. After the surrender General Grant issued returns to the 20,000 confederate soldiers and the jig was up.

Raw Reporter. A reporter wrote of the incident as follows: "Through his horse being frightened by a passing motor car, Mr. — was thrown out of his trap and severely injured, the motorist rendering every assistance."

Swiss Savings. Fifty years ago, in Switzerland, 180,000 depositors possessed $12,000,000 in 167 savings banks. There are now 1,400,000 depositors possessing $180,000,000 in more than 800 savings banks.

Hunt in Strange Storm. Followers of the hounds in Leicestershire, England, had the unusual experience recently of hunting in a heavy snowstorm to the accompaniment of thunder and lightning.

Quite the Opposite. Hinks—Here's a rather clever little book, "Don'ts for Clubmen." Wicks—Hub! It isn't the "don'ts" that worry clubmen. It's the "do's"—Philadelphia Ledger.
