The ungrateful Mial E Lilley is at his old tricks again. They are of the same old deceptive nature and this time the Horn Mial is professing undying allegiance for the Boys in Blue. In fact he is at the present time extremely desirous that all the old soldiers should receive pensions and that all the present pensioners should have a substantial increase. Mial is show ing his fox-like instincts. He realizes that if the Democrats and the Lincoln party play the cards he will gracefully glide up the fluepipe on the ides of November next. The writer, in common with hundreds of other soldiers, knows better than to be fooled by the wily Mial, the ungrateful and fast withering Lilley. The other day ! heard a party of the old boys saying what a friend he would be to them just at this time, but every one of them winked the other eye and looked knowing. They evi dently think Mial is taking their measure as fools. If the boys should find the word "Lincoln" on the ticket next fall they are sure to place a mark of respect in the shape of a cross in the square opposite the name they love so well.

The soldiers did not have any special interest in E. J. Connelly of Sayre but they are a unit in saying that they have never heard of so ungrateful a trick as was played upon him by Lilley. The boys say they have no respect for an ingrate and unless there should be a wonderful change of heart during the next six months Mr. Lilley will be shown where they stand.
