SERIOUS RUNOFF

Athens—Floyd Winters while driving a pair of spirited horses attached to his meat wagon down Satterlee street yesterday afternoon met with an accident that wrecked his wagon and gave him some painful bruises. The bridge company had dug a ditch across the road near the intersection of Maple street to carry off the water from the plant. The ditch was filled with a rapidly running stream and when the horses approached it they became frightened and jumped the stream. In doing so one horse jumped over the pole and the wagon was overturned, making a general mixup. Mr. Winters was severely bruised before he could extricate himself from the wreck. The pole and whiffletrees were broken which released the team. They ran down to the river's edge and then made a turn back into River street to Ferry and from there to the intersection of Main street where one of the horse fell. They were captured and taken to Fitzgerald's barn. The horses were only slightly injured.

ALL DERBIES LOOK ALIKE.
That Was Why a Traveling Man Came to Be Wearing a Second-Handed Hat.
A hasty man told this one to a Baltimore street hater a few days ago, relates the Sun of that city:
"Late one night while in Washington I dined in a cafe on Pennsylvania avenue and took away some one else's hat. I did not discover the mistake until I got on the train bound for Baltimore. It had the other fellow's initials there in bright gilt letters on the inside and there was no excuse for the blunder.
The next morning I began to realize that the hat did not fit me as well as it had seemed to, so I dropped it in a hat store and bought a new one. The hatter asked me if I wanted my initials put in the new hat, and I told him yes. He perforated them into the sweatband with a big chopping machine. The next day at church I happened to glance in my hat. The initials were the same as those in the hat which I picked up in Washington. Of course, the hatter concluded that the initials in the old hat were my own.
"Every time I visit a house where there happens to be hats on the rack looking like mine I have to make this long-winded explanation. They are getting to doubt whether I ever have any but second-hand hats, especially the women. Funny, ain't it? Women think all derbies are alike."
"Yes; seems some men have trouble in distinguishing them," said the clerk.

BALTIC AMBER HUNTERS.
Work Only in the roughest Weather and Earn But a Scant Livelihood.
The poor people who earn a precarious livelihood by gathering amber on the shores of the Baltic sea work only in the roughest weather. When the wind blows in from the sea, as it often does with terrific violence, the boulders are tossed and tumbled at the bottom and great quantities of sea wrack are washed up on the beach. This is the harvest of the waders, for hidden in the roots and branches of the seaweed lumps of the precious gum may be found.
In other parts of the coast divers go crawling on the bottom of the sea for the lumps of amber hidden in seaweed and under rocks. It is believed that once a great pine forest flourished here, where the great billows roll, and that amber is the gum exuded from the trees, of which not a vestige remains.
The finds are very variable. The largest piece known, weighing 19 pounds, is in the Royal museum in Berlin. The usual finds range from lumps as big as a man's head to particles like grains of sand. The larger pieces are found jammed in rocks or in tangles of marine vegetation. Divers work from four to five hours a day in all seasons, except when the sea is blocked with ice.
