TALE FROM A GIRL'S DIARY.

seems yesterday that I was eight and erical because Auton McFedries Bruce love. I was six then and I lisped. I remember the lisp particularly, because Anton McFedries took exception to it. He mimicked me dreadfully. I don't original, but he managed to make it uncided to—the day he had his two front beth removed. But he made so much of them in his pocket and dwelt with such color on his heroic conduct under the ordeal of their extraction that my courage melted before him.

Then, six months later, after I and gone through the same ordeal, he commanded me peremptorily to look the other way whenever I found it necessary to open my mouth,

I remember the birthday present Anton McFedries gave me the year I was seven. His mother let him choose it himself. It was a small wooden gun that shot corks with dreadful velocity We played a good deal with the gunthat is, Auton McFedries shot the corks at me. I think it was my nose that he aimed at especially, and when he missed, which was always, I was quite ready to ascribe his failure to the unsatisfactory proportions of the target, which Anton McFedries

There was an understanding between us, of course. We were to live together always, in a log cabin in a deep forest and our domestic routine was to consist for the most part of a series of heroic rescues, in which I was to be successively torn from the embraces of bears and the teeth of wolves. Anton McFeders always figured magnificently in a haze of gunpowder and a glitter of steel. My only prerogative, aside from being rescued, was to make cookies. Anton Mc-Fedries conceded the cookles because he adored my mother's lemon snaps, and I assured him that I should make them just as good when I grew up. I remember, too, that I was sternly denied wallpaper and lace curtains in the dec oration of our log cabin, and I had to make up my mind to the arrangement of sleeping wrapped up in a blanket on the floor.

Aside from making the cookies, this was not the domestic picture which I would have planned, but I felt my lisp and my other limitations and therefore the necessity of curbing my own imag ination. I shall never again be so hum bly or subserviently in love as I was with

I was eight when he moved away. He gave me his guinea pigs, three canceled postage stamps and a stick of gum at They were the only visible signs of his emotion, but I frankly expressed myself in tears.

Six months ago he moved back again. I called him Mr. Bruce then. I was greatly surprised to see how he had changed. I think he was equally surprised when he saw I was not the same. I think he expected that my two front teeth would still be missing and that my lisp would be as propounced as ever.

Neither of us had lived up to those early ambitions. I was still in ignorance of the recipe for lemon snaps and he had nettled down quite tamely to an office on a tenth floor somewhere without any thought of forests and log cabins and heroic encounters.

I asked him last night if he remembered the utilitarian connection in which he used to view my nose. That was at a moment when he was viewing it and me in a very different connection indeed, and I wanted to avert a catastrophe. He only remarked, quite curtly, that he must have been a young

This morning the catastrophe arrived by the first mail. It wanted to know if I had forgotten the old understanding and it asked if I would not please renew

It is quite a different understanding that he suggests now. There would be paper, and I would not be compelled to sleep in a blanket on the floor. would be the center of attraction my self instead of a victim to my husband's heroisms. My nose would remain for-ever unmolested and I would be permitted activities beyond the manufacture of lemon snaps. It was a very much more comfortable understanding Anton McFedries certainly has greatly changed. He no longer domineers or tyrannizes or lords it over me. He would not think of asking me to turn in the opposite direction if the expression of my face did not sult him. To-day, when he remembered my birthday, it was with something very different from a wooden gun with corks for ammun!

Yet I much preferred the embryo hunter and potential hero who trod on my personality and stifled my imagination when I was eight. I was very much more ecstatic under the old arrange ment, which included vicious imitations of my lisp and the elimination of all feminine preferences. I find that I cannot renew the understanding with Anton McFedries Bruce.

One of the party seized a pail and, dipping up some water out of the river, threw it into the blaze in an effort to quench it. This, however, only made matters worse, and the flames soon covered the whole boat and burned the occupants mere or less severely. One of the members of the party, William Huyes of Burnside, in an endeavor to escape from the flames jumped overloard. This act his companions did not notice until his cries rose from the water. They could not locate them, how ever, and after one or two cries noth

PLANS HIS OWN PRISON.

Gourdain Teday Will Start to tribute $4,000,000

CHICAGO, July 1. Louis A. Gourdain, who has been vainly trying to have bimself put in the Illinois state prison, came back to Chicago from New York with several new ideas. He said he would start at once building his "penitentiary annex" at Joliet and have it all ready in case the United States supreme court faile to grant

"Today I will start to give away $4. 000,000 to persons who have lost money investing in my enterprise, which the government has beld illegal. I figure that I have taken in from $800,000 to $1,500,000 a month in the last five years. I shall post notice to that effect in every postoffice in the United States. That's the only way I can get a list of the names.

"While in New York I engaged a warden and an assistant warden for my penttentiary annex. They will leave jobs in another prison. I'll pay them double the salaries of those offi cials in the Joliet penitentlary. I have hired six Chicago men as guards. They will receive double the salary of guards at Joliet.

"I will have plans and specifications for my prison annex today. Architect Campbell of Joliet is preparing them. The prison will be 40 by 40, a replica of the one owned by the state. "I will make shoes, shirts and coats
