GENERAL RICE BURIED.

Unusual Honor Paid Dead Soldier at Boston.

BOSTON, July 25.—After funeral services at his late home in Wakefield, at which Rev. Rufus S. Chase, rector of Emmanuel church, read the Episcopal service, E. W. Kinsey, Post 113, G. A. R., observed the Grand Army ritual, under the direction of Dr. W. H. Ruddle, commander of the post, and Governor Curtis Guild, Jr., who was a personal friend of the dead general, spoke in eulogy, the body of Brigadier General Edmund Rice was escorted by a detachment of the regular army from Fort Banks and by the Seventh regiment of the Massachusetts militia to the statehouse, where for several hours it lay in state.

The unusual honor of having the body of the soldier thus placed was due to the fact that General Rice had performed unusual military service, as he had commanded Massachusetts troops in both the civil war and Spanish war and in the Philippines.

The coffin containing the body was mounted upon a gun carriage and thus drawn to the statehouse, preceded by the infantry. The casket was draped in an American flag and upon it rested the general's sword. Behind the artillery wagon was led the officer's horse.

Crowds lined the streets as the funeral cortege passed to the strains of dirges by two regimental bands. At the capitol the body was placed in the hall of flags and around it the soldiers grouped themselves as a bodyguard, while the members of several military organizations, including the G. A. R., were present as guards of honor.

Afterward the soldiers escorted the body to the South station, where it was placed upon the Federal express bound for Washington. Interment will be made in the National cemetery at Arlington.

SOUTH FRAMINGHAM DISASTER.

Body of Eleventh Victim Taken From Ruins Was That of E. L. Sawyer.

SOUTH FRAMINGHAM, Mass., July 25.—The search for the bodies of workmen and other persons thought to be buried in the ruins of the collapsed business block on Concord street continued all night and throughout the day.

Tons of debris have been removed from the building and hauled away, but many tons more remained untouched by the shoveling gangs, and it was evident that considerable time must elapse before it could be said with certainty that all the bodies had been recovered.

The finding of the body of Henry L. Sawyer, a prominent hardware dealer, who went to the building to inspect the plumbing plans, brought the number of dead up to eleven, and it is believed that there are four more to be found. Several workmen were still reported missing, and it was supposed that they were caught beneath the falling walls.

With the exception of Chester Nicholson, whose back was broken, all the injured are reported as comfortable. Nicholson's condition continues very serious, and the physicians fear that he will be unable to survive the shock of the operation which is thought to be necessary.

The selectmen have extended an invitation to the state police to investigate the cause of the collapse.

THE COLONEL'S LUCK.

BY WILLIS BROOKS.

We had been telling our various experiences with burglars, footpads, pickpockets and the like, when the colonel, who had been silent until now, spoke of the time he was robbed of a little more than $15,000 by confidence operators.

This promised to be a story worth hearing, so we all settled back in our chairs and gave attention.

"It was several years ago," the colonel began. "At that time I had never owned so much as $15,000 all at once, so, as you may guess, the loss fell very heavily upon me. I had bought a ticket in the Louisiana lottery without any very great expectations—I would not let myself expect—but the fact that one of our townsmen had, some months before, won a small fortune in this way made my two brothers and me take several flyers in the lottery, and I confess that once in awhile I did ask myself, 'What if my ticket did win a capital prize?' I didn't expect it to, you understand, but I speculated a good deal on what if—"

"Well, on the morning following one of the drawings my younger brother came bursting into my room with the local newspaper in his hand and a look of excitement on his face.

"Ed," said he, stifling his voice, that our father and mother, who were pious people and did not believe in lotteries, might not hear. 'Ed, wake up. You've won $15,000.'"

"I was awake on the instant—wide awake. The newspaper was before me, and my brother's finger was upon the spot in the telegraphic report of the drawing, where the number of my ticket was printed in plain figures opposite the amount for which it called. To say that I shared my brother's excitement would be to put it very mildly, but I concealed my feelings better than he did, even going so far as to say, with apparent calmness, that there was probably some mistake about it and that we would better keep the matter quiet until the report was confirmed.

"However, by the time I had breakfasted, and started for my office—I was then practicing law in a small way in my native town—it seemed as if everybody I met knew all about my stroke of luck. I was congratulated on all sides, though I didn't suppose half a dozen persons knew even that I had ever bought a lottery ticket. But it seems my brothers, who had gone down-town ahead of me, had told a few in confidence, and those few had in turn confided it to everybody else they met.

"From eight o'clock in the morning until two in the afternoon my office was thronged with men, who came to offer congratulations, to suggest this, that and the other good investment for me, and to offer excellent advice about not losing my head over my sudden acquisition. Meantime I passed out cigars—the best that could be obtained in the town—by the boxful. I must have spent $15 or $20 in this way before the Chicago morning papers arrived, on the two o'clock train that afternoon. Then I found that I had been robbed, willfully, cruelly, robbed of my $15,000 by men in whom I had placed the utmost confidence, and from whom I had reason to expect better treatment."

The colonel sat in silence for a full minute, apparently indulging in bitter memories of the experience. The rest of us maintained silence, too. The situation was a delicate one. We were all probably agreed upon the thought that his brothers had in some way procured possession of his ticket and drawn the money upon it, but none of us felt like venturing to suggest such a thought, since it might not be true.

Finally, when the silence had become painful, one of the company asked: "Who robbed you, colonel?"

"My brothers," he answered, sorrowfully—"my brothers and one other man."

Again we were silent. One does not like to express adverse opinions of a friend's brothers, even though he himself may not seem to hold them in very high esteem.

"How did they do it, colonel?" somebody at last ventured to inquire.

"By making me believe I had won the $15,000 prize," he answered. "Those rascally brothers of mine had connived with a printer in the office of the local newspaper to change the number of the winning ticket after the editors had read the profits."

The joke went round, the old colonel enjoying the joke as much as any of us. "But," he added, seriously, "I was just as surely robbed of that $15,000 as if I had had the money in my pocket and it had been stolen from me. What with the congratulations and the discussions about investments and the unquestioning acceptance of the situation by everybody with whom I talked, I had come to regard myself as the actual possessor of the little fortune and as a man of affairs. It was a mere joke, of course, and I had to accept it good-naturedly as such, but I don't mind telling you now that it was the very severest financial jolt I ever received in my life—fully as hard to bear as if I had actually drawn the money and been swindled out of it in a lump by professional confidence men. And when you come right down to it, what is the difference between losing money that you have and losing money that you think you have?"—Brooklyn Eagle.
