"All the news that's fit to print"

MONDAY, JULY 30, 1906

Fearful of Coming Trouble. The wives of two musicians met on the street one day, says the Ponca (Okla.) Courier. One was pushing a baby carriage containing three babies triplets.

Captured Monkey-Faced Owl. A monkey-faced owl, the rarest specimen of a bird ever seen in California, flew through a glass window at Redding schoolhouse and was captured alive by the janitor, who presented it to the landlord of the Temple hotel, where it is on exhibition before many wondering gazers.

Guards Against Kisses. Two soldiers have been detailed to watch Norway's new crown princes while he makes snow images or coats for otherwise this had, three years old might be kissed to death by the crowds in the parks where he takes his outings.

Eggs for Whisky Salesmen. Again we say to the Pratt ladies, if you do not want the booze drammers here, egg him out of town every time he sticks up his head, says the Pratt (Kan.) Union. Use eggs with whiskers on them, too, if you want to more positively punctuate your order.

Passing of Noted Chemist. Prof. Robert Ogden Doremus, the noted chemist, who died in New York a short time ago, aged 82 years, was a well-known expert on the effects of poison. He equipped the first laboratory in the United States for instructing medical students in analytical chemistry.

Not Deterred by Noise. The idea that birds select secluded places to build their nests has been proved false. Birds have been known to build in the noisiest or most conspicuous places.

Quits an Achievement. Ascum—Of course, you consider you dance quite pretty. Bragley—Well, yes. "They tell me, at any rate, that she is very clever."

Rich Plowing. Farmers down in Richmond county, on Dry creek, North Carolina, are plowing up coals. On the south side of the creek copper pieces bearing the name of George Washington are being found, and on the north side, the coins unearthed bear the names of kings of England.

Plans for Sanitarium. Waverly—Dr. Ellsworth Gamble is contemplating starting a sanitarium in the Lyman house on North Waverly street and is in communication with several doctors in view of getting an assistant. He has obtained an option on the property, which is particularly adapted for the purpose. Waverly people hope to see the venture consummated, and wish the doctor success.

Free Free. Mrs. A. C. Trainor, Colchester, Conn., writes that a free sample bottle of Bloodine helped her when she was all run down. Bloodine is a body builder and system tonic of wonderful merit, and if you have not tried it, you should today.

Found at Last. A cure for Eczema. Mrs. Charles Hunsford of Philadelphia, Pa., writes that she had suffered for many years with this terrible disease and had tried every remedy ready for it, but could not find a cure, until she was advised to try Bloodine Ointment, and to her great surprise she has had it nearly all of the old sores, and the second has completely cured her. Jealous Husband Gave Clue

"It is generally the duty of a post office inspector to solve the mystery of a robbery of mail without a single clue to begin with," said Inspector in Chief Letherman to a Boston Globe writer.

"The recent finding of a mail pouch destined for Newton, but reaching the waters of the harbor, with the letters gone, is a case in point. I remember when I was an inspector at Cincinnati I was called out by telegram to unravel the mystery of a lost pouch containing valuable mail.

"I reached the town late in the evening, and hunted up the postmaster, who was a prominent politician and a man of high standing. He told me there was absolutely no clue to the pouch, which should have arrived at 11:15 p. m. the night before and did not. He said, however, that a city officer had said to him that if some one talked with a certain woman some information might be secured.

"This woman, it was said, would witness a parade next morning from a window in the office of a business company, and a description of her was furnished. Just before the parade I went to the street number designated, but saw no one answering the description at any of the windows.

"There was a lady, very refined and well dressed, wearing the same sort of a coat and fur, standing on the curb, but it did not seem possible that she could know anything about the robbery. Still, as a matter of duty, I moved beside her and handed her my card.

"She did not glance at it, but turned her face away. I then asked when the parade started. She made no reply, but turned and walked away. I followed at a distance, and saw her enter one of the richest homes in town.

"I went back, thinking I had been deceived, and saw at the window the woman who had been described to me. I walked into the crowd around the windows and handed her my card. 'I cannot talk to you here, but come to my house to-night,' she said, 'this is the address.'

"I called that evening, and found the place was not the most aristocratic in the world. Far from it. 'She chatted for a time, and then, becoming friendly, asked me if I could get a money order for $50 cashed for her. I told her I thought I could and would see the postmaster about it.

"I took the order, and the next morning satisfied myself that it did not belong to her, and, furthermore, that it was in a letter sent in the morning pouch.

"I went back to the house to see her about it, and asked where she got it. She said a man who owed her some money had sent it to her. I told her if it was all right it would be paid the next day, and changed the subject. At length she asked me if I would drink a glass of ale and started down to the cellar to get some. As an excuse when she was half down stairs I offered to help her, and started down. 'You must not come down here—my husband will not like it,' she said, but I kept on down.

"The cellar was filled with plunder—ham, by the score, boxes and packages of all kinds, and one box opened at one end exposed two or three silk parasols. I asked her what the collection meant, and she said her husband was going to open a store and had been collecting merchandise.

"She pledged me not to tell, as he had not resigned his position yet, and did not want it known that he was going into business for himself until he got all prepared.

"I had heard of the pillaging of freight cars when I first came to town, but as I was not on that errand I made no further remarks. The next day bunches of looted mail began to come into the post office, picked up by citizens. It was found on board sidewalks, in store boxes and out of the way corners.

"The mail had all been opened and rifled, but the letters were in the envelopes. On my next visit to the lady's house she showed me four silk handkerchiefs she said she had received, as a present, and asked me what I thought they were worth.

"The next visit resulted in a full confession of all she knew about the robbery. She had an admirer who gave her the order to be cashed and the handkerchiefs.

"The husband was suspicious of him, and gave the slight tip to the postmaster. I learned that the admirer was employed at a livery stable and slept in the loft, that he was in the habit of hitching up for the man who had the contract for carrying the night mails from the trains to the post office, and that the two were very chummy.

"I went to the stable and was told the employe was asleep in the loft. I took an officer with me. We had to go up a ladder. There was nothing in sight in the loft but a pile of hay, but I noticed a tunnel in it. I reached in, got hold of a dog and quickly withdrew my hand. We then took a fork and turned over the hay, and at the end of the tunnel found the man we were looking for.

"He confessed that day. He told us where the pouch was hidden, and we found it. He proved to be an convict from a neighboring state. He got five years and the mail wagon driver got three, and all I had to go on was a little tip from a jealous husband.
