Seven German-American sculptors were invited to enter a competition last summer by a committee comprising Secretary Taft, Senator Wetmore

and Representative McCreary. The result of that competition was that the committee selected the models of Albert Jaegers.

In the accepted model Gen. von Steuben appears in the familiar cocked hat and a long, full, all-embracing cloak, as though facing or enduring the hardships of the rigorous winter campaign at Valley Forge. He stands squarely facing the observer in an attitude of power and dignity. Slightly leaning with his left hand upon the sword, he is represented as inspecting military maneuvers. His personality, though quiet and simple, is essentially military. The sash he wears is reminiscent of his previous service as an officer of Frederick the Great.

Flanking the statue at the base of the pedestal are two chaste allegorical groups. One of these represents Steuben's life work, "The Training of the American Army." It is worked out in an ideal composition theroughly Greek in feeling, showing an experienced warrior instructing a youth in the use of his sword.

The group on the other side is a departure from the customary symbols of paying tribute to our heroes, and represents America teaching a maiden to graft a branch to Steuben's memory into her growing tree of fame.

In the design of the entire monument the sculptor, with his associate architect, T. R. Johnson, consulted Cass Gilbert, the well-known New York architect. They took into special consideration the location of the monument and the general scale of the other monuments in Lafayette park and adapted the design to the classic tendency of the time. This monument will form an important addition to the artistic features of the city and will be in harmony with the grand scheme of the development of Washington proposed by the park derly gentleman one day, and as they commission.

PLAN A GIGANTIC DRYDOCK.

Largest Structure of Its Kind to Be Erected on Puget Sound.

Washington.-Plans for the largest and best drydock in the world are being prepared in the bureau of yards and docks at the navy department The last naval appropriation act con tained provision for a dock to cost $1,250,000 to be constrcted at the Bremerton navy yard, Puget Sound, Washington. This amount is larger than ever heretofore appropriated for a dock and the new dock will when completed be able to take in the largest battleship either in course of construction or in contemplation. The location for the dock has already been selected at the yard and borings are now being made to learn the depth of the foundation. It is to be a concrete dock of the latest pattern and the materials will be purchased on the Pacific coast if practicable. The dock is to be so constructed that it can be lengthened if vessels of greater length should be built in the It will be 37 feet in depth, which will provide for the docking of any vessel that can be built unless some unknown system of building is developed. The greater depth of the new dock is also designed to meet cases where a vessel has been injured and draws much more than the or dinary depth on account of the in-

It was after a refreshing shower one norning last spring

I, a Central park worm, was taking my customary constitutional wriggle in a quiet corner of the park, and I vas extremely annoyed by the behavior of a young man seated on the beach above me, who would persist in digging up the ground with als walking-stick, and gave me no peace. Surely, I thought, there is room in the world for both of us, and there is no reason why we should have any of these territorial disputes and waste our energies in struggling for possession. Just as I was becoming quite nervous the young man jumped up, trembling all over, and nearly crushing me beneath his shoe, and at the same time a fresh-faced and bright-eyed young of Baron von Steuben, major general female of the human species came up and shook hands with him.

I flatter myself I am a good judge of women, and I assure you she was a the northwest corner of Lafayette stayed where I was, although expected

"Now don't call my future husband bad names. That's my privilege. Look at my engagement ring. I choose it because—it was the most expensive." Why pretend to be frivolous?" growled the young man, "when I know you have a heart of gold."

He stood there watching until she turned the corner.

Then he walked slowly away in the opposite direction, never raising his eves from the ground. He undoubtedly had a very bad case.

Frequently during the next few weeks the young man came and sat on the bench for an hour or so, digging with his stick. But she never appeared, and his visits gradually grew shorter and further between

After that nothing of any importance occurred during my daily wriggles. I had interest in everything, and was frequently rebuked for cynicism. It was nearly the end of the season when I strolled out at dusk one night near the same bench, and saw a female form almost reclining upon it. She was trembling with emotion, held a handkerchief to her eyes, and was sobting softly, without noticing whether there was anyone to see her. And I knew that it was Ethel come back from her honeymoon. For some time she did not remove her handkerchief; but at last she let It fall in her lap and sat there gazing into the gloom. It was a lonely spot, and now that she sobbed no longer, there was scarcely a sound to be heard. And then it was that I, but a worm, turned, at the absurdity of human love, and the inconsistency of the female of this strange species.
