LONDON, Sept. 10. The great race between Harvard and Cambridge universities resulted in victory for the English crew.

Harvard was detested by time or the strongest differently levels over been in the Themes, Strategies to Chamberine out doubt its one un the imber re sourceful sixples, with a meniors for leadership, working with brain as well as with arms and legs. He knew that he must lend the Harvard crew at the outset and keep his advantage mile after mile, and with the help of seven experienced watermen he successed in

Yet the Harvard men, while mable to overtake Cambridge, rowed with logged persistence and forced their rivals to exert themselves to the utmost. It was a long, plucky race astern, and at the end Harvard seemed fresher than Cambridge and better able to row another mile

The superior strength of the slower stroke had not been demonstrated, and there was not force in reserve for a final and invincible spurt like Gold's ten years age, when Oxford beat Cambridge from Barnes bridge after being behind three-quarters of the distance. It is quite possible that the enormous crowd and intense excitement may have affected Harvard, but from the moment Cambridge took the lead until he end of the race the Harvard boys did not show trouble, and at the end of the race in all the crew there could not be detected a sign of distress about any of them,

And yet Cambridge won by only two and then on to the Philippines-a total lengths and this over a course nearly four and a half miles in extent.

The spectacle was one of the most brilliant ever witnessed on the famous Thames course. The river was smooth and the tide full and the weather perfect for the holiday. At least 40,000 spectators lined the banks, lawns, terraces and bridges, and scores of excursion steamers were crowded with passengers. Never has the reach of the river from Putney to Mortlake, with its three quaint church towers and continuous environment of trees and turf, looked more beautiful than when a multitude of pleasure seekers had The Wisconsin returns to San Franthe satisfaction of looking on and wit- cisco, while the Ohio will come here. nessing the superior oarsmanship of their university athletes. spoke to the point. "They got away quicker than we did," he said, "and set us a terrific pace for the first mile. After that we began to close on them, but their stroke kept the men well together, so that when we spurted in the last half mile Stuart answered us by calling on Cambridge for another effort, and we failed to get up, having left it until too late. Still, we will come again and try to reverse the defeat."

English experts say there is but one explanation for the result, that of su- is in the city hospital. periority of English carsmanship and of the English stroke, Harvard, the experts declare, was one of the finest crews physically ever seen on the river, but they were unable to overcome that training which English oarsmen receive from childhood. The Cambridge crew, too, had in Stuart the advantage of one of the best strokes England has produced. They also of course had the advantage of choice of sides. But those who know the river best say this was little in their favor with tide and wind as they were.

between Herradura and Consolacion del Sur. It consisted of eighteen car loads of horses and mules, two of provisions and five coaches, with one armored car at the front and another in the rear. There were 300 soldiers on board. Machine guns operated from each armored car mowed down the rebels, and the encounter at Las Ovas was repeated in the operation. Several of the government troops were wounded. The rebels were not able to make a successful stand against the fire of the armored train guns.

The train proceeded from Paso Real to two and a third miles east of Consolacion del Sur, at which point the rails had been removed, and there replaced a locomotive and three cars which had been thrown from the track. The insurgents attacked, but were driven off by the two machine guns, handled by the American, Captain Webster. Many insurgents were killed, but the number is not known.

Meanwhile a large portion of Colonel Avalos' force bad come eastward from Pinar del Rio for the purpose of making a junction with the machine gun corps. At Consolacion del Sur their advance was disputed by a large band of insurgents, and a lively fight ensued. The insurgents were driven off, and several of them were killed or wounded. Avalos and his men con tinued their journey eastward and made a junction, first with the cavalry force of Captain Ravenna, which was scouting ahead, and finally with the armored troop train.

The train has not been molested the bridge over the Santa Clara river eastward from the train has been blown up, together with two smaller ones, preventing the use of the road beyond Herradura.

As the bridges westward near Puerta Golpe also have been destroyed, no trains can operate from Pinar del Rio city in either direction. Later 215 companion. Ruscas carried a gun and men and four machine guns, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Clews, start ed for Paso Real with horses, supplies of provisions and quantities of rapid fire gun ammunition. The sending of this force was hastened by the false a number of buckshot in the legs and news of a disaster to the armored train. Captain Ravenna, one lieutenant and four privates wounded are the only casualties reported in the Consolacion del Sur operations.

The force of Colonel Avalos for the last two days had been surrounded by Pino Guerra's Insurgents. Wire com munication, both by railroad and government lines, has been cut repeatedly and neither the railroad nor the gov ernment is able to communicate be youd Paso Real, thirty-two miles east of Pinar del Rio city.
