PUZZLING CARD TRICK.

One Can Manipulate the Little Pasteboards So as to Fool His Friends,

THE VALUE OF SECOND PURSUAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1906

This easily performed and amusing trick is done with an ordinary pack of cards. Ask one of the audience to place both hands flat on the table, then insert between each finger of his right hand two cards, or one pair, at a time This will require four pairs of cards. Follow the same method with his left hand, but placing a single card, instead of a pair, between the third and little fingers (Fig. 1). This will require three pairs and an odd card, or 15 cards in all to the two hands. Now take the two cards which are of his right hand and lay them down pocket. on the table separately side by side, at the same time saying: "That's one pair;" then take the next pair, separate the two cards and lay one on each of the cards already on the table. and say: "There's another pair." Follow exactly the same method with the remaining pairs, making the same remark with each, until only the odd card remains. This is to be placed on the left-hand pile of cards on the

Having made up the two little piles of cards on the table nice and straight (so the cards in each cannot be counted), ask anyone in the company to name which pile contains the odd card. As you have put the odd card on the left-hand pile, that will be the one selected. You then lift that pile and count out the eight cards that are fellow is liable to sail in and win the in it into four parts. Then lift the other pile and count out three pairs and an odd one over. As there are seven pairs of cards used each pile must contain seven cards. This fact is not apparent to the company if the trick is done neatly and quickly, explains the People's Home Journal, and the odd card will, of course, make an even number of cards in the pile to which it is added. Fig. 2 shows the cards as they are laid out into the two piles loosely. This is done to explain how the seven cards come in each pile.

For the playing of this little game, it is necessary that you should have a pair of knickerbockers-that you may make use of one of the pockets. Get about a score of such things as boys carry-if you don't know just what to elect, some boy will tell you and put them in the pocket, making a list of them as you do so.

Now, for your game, give to each player a pencil and a sheet of paper directing him or her to write down the numbers from one to 20 on the lefthand side of the sheet and opposite each number the name of some between the third and little fingers that may usually be found in a boy's

> When the lists have been made, onplains the People's Home Journal, they are passed by each player to the next player on the right, and the leader of the game then proceeds to take from the pocket provided for the occasion the articles that have been put there Those who hold the lists check off such articles as they find on them, and when this is done, the player who has named the most of them wins the

As the lists are to be passed to the ight before they are checked off, it is better for each player to number bis, so that all may easily be identified.

It is so Soft, Tender and Sweetly Pathetic, it Stirs Every Emotion This may seem to be a very simple game, and so it is, but no game that you can suggest will make more funand that is what a game is for. Prices 25, 35, 50 and 75c. Advance sale Wednesday at Western
