VALLEY RECORD TO HAVE NEW HOME

Will Move on or About November 1st to New Building Which is Being Erected on Lockhart Street.

Workmen today began the foundation for a building which is to be the future home of The Valley Record.

The Record's new home is being erected by H. R. Talmadge on the vacant lot on Lockhart street just west of the Wheelock block, and the contract calls for its completion by the first day of November next. The Record has entirely outgrown its present quarters, and much more room than is now provided is needed to handle its increasing volume of business. The new building will meet this requirement, and at the same time contain ample room for the installation of a modern type setting machine and a fast newspaper press. Although The Record is less than 18 months old, it is at the present time enjoying an extensive patronage which has now reached the point where the present plant and its somewhat cramped quarters are no longer able to properly care for it. Hence arrangements have been made for new quarters and new machinery which, when assembled, will make an equipment that will enable The Record to supply its patrons with a newspaper that will in every respect be strictly up-to-date and worthy of the patronage which it is already receiving. During its short life The Record has every reason to feel grateful to the business men and citizens generally of this valley. The patronage has exceeded the widest anticipations of the publisher and at this time he wishes to return his most sincere thanks, realizing that it is this patronage which has made The Record an undoubted success.

The Record expects to greet its friends and patrons in its new home on or about the first day of November next. Its new quarters will be entirely on the ground floor and centrally located.

Mrs. H. E. Graham and Mrs. J. T. Thompson of Eau Claire, Wis., have been spending a few days as guests of Mrs. E. G. Noble, and returned to their home yesterday.

The first entertainment of the high school lecture course will be G. W. Gillian, the humorist in his lecture, "Sunshine and Awardness" Oct. 31st. Tickets will be on sale one week before the lecture takes place.

HE GOT LOST

Athens—Frank Little and Al Corby went hunting on Owenshire hill yesterday and they started home on the mountain road. In some manner Little got strayed away from his companion and Corby got confused and wandered up the mountain in the forest and completely lost himself. He at last came out of the woods on McKinney hill, three miles from home, and was slowly making his way to Athens, when a rescuing party with Little as a guide, were going to his assistance. Corby was born and brought up in Athens and the boys think it is a good joke on him to get lost.

Wise Cow.
The Cow was about to jump over the moon.
"By the way," said the Cow, "I think I'll wait a moment."
"What for?" asked the Little Dog.
"Why, perhaps I can carry a sign on my back stating that I wear Jumps and Bouncers' rubber heels."
Which goes to show that the wise Cow was imbued with the modern ideas of progressive advertising.—Chicago Daily News.

Sudden Loss of Faith.
Dr. Pills (at medical meeting)—What's the matter with Dr. Physic to-night? He appears to be in a terribly bad humor—noting but impatience, irascibility, and slurs every time the wonderful progress of medical science is mentioned.
Dr. Powder—He has had rheumatism for six weeks, and all his brother physicians who were called in only made it worse.—N. Y. Weekly.

Behind the Scenes.
Old Lady—My boy, is it your father who writes so many smart sayings of children?
Small Boy—Yes, ma'am.
"I suppose he always encourages you to talk."
"No, ma'am. He threatens to thrash me if I even whisper when he is writing his smart things the children have said."—Caswell's Journal.

Generosity.
"What made you refuse to answer questions in that investigation?"
"My dear sir," answered Mr. Dustin Star, "I am of the people you read about whose time is worth several hundred dollars a minute. Isn't that a sufficient contribution to the occasion without throwing in valuable information?"—Washington Star.

The Present Theory.
"This building," said the fancier, "is an ugly looking brute, but he can't fight. While this one (indicating No. 2) is just the opposite."
"Give me the ugly looking one," said the purchaser. "I want him for protection, and this is the age of bluff."—Detroit Free Press.

Reversed.
Parent (who has received news of his son's death in the far west)—And how did poor William meet his death?
Western Friend—He didn't meet it at all, sir. The boys had to chase him ten miles before they could catch him and put the rope round his neck.—Caswell's Journal.

Where Officers Congregate.
Towne—I understand your new house is only a few doors from a saloon.
Brown—Yes, it's great!
Towne—Great? I should think you'd object to that.
Brown—Not at all. It's a protection; it draws the police.—Philadelphia Press.

What a Pity.
"Why is it that so many people do not care for Shakespeare?"
"My dear sir," answered Mr. Stormington Barnes, "it is a physical impossibility for me to show everybody in the world just how Shakespeare should be played."—Washington Star.

STUDY OF CRIMINOLOGY TURNS EDUCATED MAN INTO A THIEF

Graduate of Rush Medical College Proud of His Evil Accomplishments—Only Sorry That Morphine Has Sapped His Ambition.

Denver, Col.—William James Patterson, M. A., graduate of Rush and Washington medical schools, was arrested here the other day on a $20 forgery charge. Patterson lays the arrest to deep delving in criminology, and declared that he was glad he was a criminal. His only regret, he said, was that he had allowed the morphine habit to gain such a hold on him that he had not become the greatest criminal of the age.

Patterson's is a story of a long battle by a man of high instincts against a degenerate tendency. Finally the bad in him won.

Much of his downfall Patterson attributes to his long study of the psychology of crime. So thoroughly, he says, has he mastered the subject that he regards Macdonald as almost a type, although the latter's works are standard the world over.

In his early years Patterson fought against his inherent desire to take what belonged to his fellow man because of the disgrace that he feared his father, mother and other loved ones would suffer from his actions. When he met, loved and wooed the woman of his choice, for her sake and for the sake of the children that were born to them, he continued to wage the unequal battle. It was heredity versus environment, he declares. Heredity finally won.

That is the excuse which the once famed physician and instructor gives for his present condition. From a man of prominence and an heir to great wealth, Patterson's fall has been so complete that the police found him living in the most abject poverty in a dingy room in the lower part of the city.

"My one great regret in life is that I have fallen a slave to the morphine habit and, unable to resist its use, have failed in my ambition to become the greatest criminal of the age," was the amazing statement Dr. Patterson made after his arrest.

"I glory in crime and am a criminal because it is impossible for me to be anything else. I have tried and failed, and am glad of it. The fight was unequal at best, and I am glad that I finally started out in a career of crime and that I have committed thefts and burglaries, have stolen into houses at night time and taken property that belonged to others, for the pure love of it.

"I did not need the money, did not want the booty that I took away after I got it, but there was a satisfaction too deep for words or self-satisfying for explanation.

"I imagine that a woman who has held her lover at arm's length, and, perhaps for the best of reasons, has refused to surrender to him for a long time, must feel much as I did when I committed my first theft.

"It was not much, too little a thing to notice. Yet it was the beginning of a career that I mapped out for myself after I fully realized that there was nothing in the world that could prevent me from being anything but a thief.

"I was in a fellow physician's office. I saw a pocketbook lying on the table. He was busy with a patient. I opened the wallet and found two dollars in it.

"I then had plenty of money. The contents of the purse could do me little good, but resist the desire to take the money I could not—did not. I knew that the high character I bore would protect me from the possibi-ty of exposure. The cunning that I have learned since, which I use to protect me from being found out when I have succumbed to my desire to take possession of that which does not belong to me, was not necessary in that case. That was years ago—how many I do not know. It was the best thing.

"The desire to commit crime is similar to the desire of a genius to develop the talents which are his. It often is the strongest passion of his life, for which he will give up everything else just as an artist will struggle along for years, go without the necessities that he might have in some other walk of life, that he may devote the talent which he feels within himself.

"I have watched the development of the thief instinct in myself from the time that I was old enough to understand the meaning of the feeling which took possession of me. I never had the desire to kill, but I possessed a talent for scheming and outwitting others.

"My early youth was spent in Salina, Kan. As my parents were wealthy I was given every educational advantage. As soon as I became old enough to read and understand what I read, I gloried in the achievements of noted criminals, even murderers. That was the kind of literature that I read when I could steal time from my studies. I found the same kind of interest in that kind of romance as others found in love stories and stuff of that kind.

"I was too intelligent, though, not to understand to what instincts such as I felt in myself led, and did not immediately succumb to my desire to become a criminal.

"I have never accomplished anything worthy in the annals of crime and probably never will. My offenses have all been of the minor sort because, like men who have the talent but fall to become great writers or inventors, I became slave to habit, which was stronger than ambition, stronger than the impelling force that would have made my name a household word as a criminal if I had not fallen by the wayside, as so many others have done before me.

New Husband Takes Kiss from His Reluctant Bride After Hard Fight

Waukegan, Ill., Bridegroom Asserts His Authority in First Minute of Married Life, Right Before the Whole Crowd, Too.

Waukegan, Ill.—The marriage of Henry Berninger, of Milwaukee, and Miss May Martin, of Chicago, at the courthouse by Justice E. V. Orvis was followed the other day by an unusual silence, when the bridegroom and bride wrestled before the officials over a kiss.

The bridegroom finally got it, much to the bride's apparent displeasure.

Immediately after the words "I now pronounce you man and wife," Berninger turned to his bride and attempted to kiss her.

"No, you don't," said she, and covered her face with her arms so he could not.

"Why, what's the matter?" asked the astonished bridegroom.

"I shan't let you kiss me here right in front of these people," said she, as if she meant it.

"Well, I guess you will," said the husband with a rather disappointed smile. Then he started for her again, a look of determination on his face.

The witnesses and others in the courtroom chuckled as they saw the determined resistance the bride put up, for she seemed deeply in earnest.

Then the bride and bridegroom wrestled back and forth. It looked for a time as if the bride was to win.

Back and forth they wrestled, and at last there was heard a loud "smack," whereupon the bridegroom, sweating and his white tie twisted, quit the struggle and said: "There, I said I would, and I did."

The bride, apparently much disgusted, remarked: "Well, you think you're smart, don't you?" and turned and walked out of the room.
