BWARE TONIGHT 'TIS HALLOWE'EN

Waverly—If you have a fence around your lot and a gate on it you should take it into the cellar tonight and lock it securely. Any chairs or foot mats or other articles that encumber your porch should also be taken in and carefully secured. It would also be a good thing if you could stake down all your plank walks and securely fasten any other movable articles that you may have on your premises, because tonight is Halloween. The boy both large and small will be out in force and if he finds any portable thing about your premises you will have to look all over the face of creation the next morning before you will be able to find it. If while sitting comfortably in your room you suddenly hear a sound like violent thunder in close proximity to you do not get excited; it is only a boy with a string on a spool which combination is commonly called a tick-tack. You will not be able to keep the cabbage stumps and antiquated vegetables off your porch whatever precautions you may make, so just sweep them off the next morning and keep still about it. Don't swear at the tough youngster who lives in the next block for doing it either. Probably the nice boy who lives next door and who sympathizes with you next morning is the one who is the target at which you should hurl your condemnation. You can't stop it and so you had better take it and keep still.

HEAR THIS LECTURE

If Waverly people realized what a treat they have in store in the lecture that will be delivered at the Baptist church this evening by Russell H. Conwell of Philadelphia, few of them would let the opportunity to hear him pass by without taking advantage of it. He is one of the most pleasing orators before the public today. He mixes humor and pathos in his lectures, and the whole contains a lesson that his auditors will never forget. The money he makes on his lecture tours does not enrich him in the least, but goes toward the support of poor students who are striving to obtain an education.

FUNERAL YESTERDAY

NEXT SUNDAY'S NEW YORK WORLD

European courts are, just now, being charmed by a young American girl not yet out of her teens. She has fairly hypnotized the effete monarchs and their courts by her great charms, and is having unprecedented honors showered upon her. She is a New York girl, and it will be a matter of pride for New Yorkers, as well as all Americans to read about her and see her picture. Among many other most interesting features, this will be a part of next Sunday's New York World.

Vice president C. A. Middleton, General Passenger Agent Charles H. Lee, District Passenger Agents Heller and Millsbaugh, and Mr. Titus, superintendent of the Auburn division of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, passed through Sayre this afternoon. The officials were on their way west on a tour of inspection.

EMERY'S DEFI TO THE STANDARD

Attacked and Villified in 1887 Just as in 1906.

To any one familiar with the legislation of Pennsylvania during the past 20 years there is something grotesquely laughable in the insinuation made by machine organs that Lewis Emery, Jr., is secretly an ally of the Standard Oil company and has ever been insincere in his denunciations of that iniquitous corporation. Such a charge recalls one of the most strenuous incidents of Mr. Emery's life, his championship in the legislature of 1887 of the Billingsley bill, which was intended to regulate the charges of pipe line companies that the Standard's oppression of the independent oil producers would be broken and that great industry would be allowed to expand naturally.

Mr. Emery had charge of this bill in the state senate and his heart and soul advocacy of it brought upon him the bitter attacks of such Standard Oil organs as the Oil City Derrick, then as now ever ready to do the bidding of its managers. The bill was, of course, vigorously opposed by all the machine senators, their special spokesman being George W. Delamater, of Meadville, the subservient tool whom Quay selected as his candidate for governor in 1890, who went down in inglorious defeat before Robert E. Pattison, and who, after the disgraceful failure of his banking house, retired to well deserved obscurity on the Pacific coast. After being bitterly fought the bill came up for final action in the senate on April 29, 1887. The excitement was intense, and the oil regions, which were unanimously for the measure, sent down a large delegation of oil producers and refiners to appeal for its passage.

A contemporary account gives an interesting story of the debate. It will be noticed that even then, nearly 20 years ago, the Standard's organs were circulating the old lie about Emery which they have revamped for the present campaign. He showed its falsity then, as he has done since, in the vigorous language this infamous charge always calls forth from him. The account says:

"Mr. Emery proceeded by having read the bitter charges made against him by the Oil City Derrick, also a communication from himself to the Meadville Tribune denying the truth of the charge. This charge, it will be remembered, set forth that Mr. Emery had offered to sell his $100,000 refinery in Philadelphia to the Standard Oil company for $750,000, and that he had said that if they would give him this sum he would not fight them any longer. He produced the sworn affidavits of A. H. Logan and W. R. Weaver, his partners, setting forth that the consultations held were at the solicitation of the Standard people and that the Standard had offered to buy the refinery and give Mr. Emery $22,500 per annum for five years, provided all friction should cease. Mr. Emery, continuing, said:

"In spite of my earnest denials the Derrick and Titusville Herald, hired sheets, subsidized villifiers, continued to flout this shameful lie in my teeth. No man can charge that I do not enjoy the confidence of my constituents. But these hounds of hell have sent marked copies of their infamous sheets into my very house, to all of my constituents, and to almost every paper from the Atlantic to the Pacific. These people have followed me since 1872, and twice robbed me of my home. There sits one excitedly pointing to Mr. Scheide who has villified me on this floor by telling senators he believed I was a 'boodle-taker.' He has no business upon this floor, much less to injure my standing with fellow members. Thousands of people from your country would have come here to work for this measure, but I tell you they are too poor to ride and could not walk, unless they did so barefooted. They have been driven to poverty by the nefarious practices and exorbitant charges of this gigantic monopoly.

"Had I ever for a moment considered dollars and cents I would have gone to the Standard long ago. I had many opportunities. I rise in defense of myself for the people who do not know: Those who know need no denial. I submit to you, senators, whether I am right in defending my character. These Standard men are here hired to defeat this measure right or wrong. I stand here," exclaimed Mr. Emery with vehemence, "as a man to defy these scoundrels in court. I say that when they said that I had ever tried to barter with them they lied. I have thrown down the gauntlet and dare them, ay, defy them, to take it into court. Throw open the doors of the court and take these charges I make if you dare. I look men in the face about me who came to me with the dirty and libelous publication and said: 'Mr. Emery, I don't believe these charges.' It is not for them that I make my defence, but for people who do not know me. Because I am here in defense of a just law, I submit that I should not be defamed by these villifying articles. You may say, why don't you sue them. If I sue the Derrick no one there is responsible. If I sue the Titusville Herald there the same case exists. Mr. Scheide takes good care to qualify his statements, or I would get him as I should like to. Senators, I thank you for the kind attention. I have made my declaration. They are all liars from the old school. The courts are open to them."

Mr. Emery followed up this personal explanation with two hours of a solid argument in which he produced facts and figures to show why the Billingsley bill should be passed. The senate was under Standard Oil and railroad domination, however, and the measure was beaten by a vote of 25 to 18. It is interesting to note that among those voting to kill the bill was Boies Penrose, then serving his first term in the state senate. His vote was then, as ever, since, always to be depended on by the corporations as against the people. There is something refreshing, after the lapse of nearly 20 years, to read over those passionate words of Mr. Emery in behalf of his own good name and in advocacy of a measure intended to check monopoly and benefit the oil industry of Pennsylvania. There is a stirring ring about them that speaks the thoroughly honest and sincere man aroused to furious indignation by the wrongs which he vainly seeks to correct. And how precisely similar Standard Oil tactics was in 1887 to those followed today. Villification of character, bribery and the subsidizing of venal newspapers. Lewis Emery, Jr., is fighting the battle of the people in 1906 just as he did in 1887, and this time the forces of right and justice will triumph over those of darkness and political iniquity.

PENROSE AS THE ISSUE

Election of Emery Will Mean Political Death of the Boss.

The real issue in the coming election, every voter in Pennsylvania should understand, is not a personal one between Stuart and Emery, but is between self-respecting independence and bossism. The fight that is being made against Stuart is not against that gentleman personally, for the ex-mayor is an amiable and kindly individual who would not knowingly hurt the feelings of a fly, but against the malign influence, the Penrose machine, that, thoroughly appreciating his weakness of character, placed him in the field as a mask for its operations.

Boies Penrose is the real issue, and that discredited boss is fighting for his political existence, not for the election of Stuart. His only interest in that candidate is by him as a possible dispenser of state patronage to enable the senator to strengthen his weakening grip upon the state. The boss' term in the United States senate will expire in March, 1909, and all the state senators who are to be chosen this year will have a voice in the selection of his successor. The senator is deeply interested in securing the election of as many puppets as he can control now, and in 1908, when the next legislature will be chosen, he treats to the excitement of a presidential election to carry into office a majority that can be tricked or coerced into sending him back to the senate for a third term.

The way to defeat these machinations of the boss is to oust him now. Senators should be elected who will refuse to vote for him if a candidate in 1909, and a governor chosen who will not allow the high offices of the state to be used as a means for strengthening the Penrose machine. The election of Emery will mean the political death of Boies Penrose and his disappearance as a boss for all time. After two years of clean, honest government the people of Pennsylvania may be confidently reposed to give the finishing touches to this hectoring politician in 1908. But the beginning must be made now, and this can only be done by the election of the fusion state ticket and a legislature that does not wear the Penrose collar.

A Practical Joke. Tramp—You saye me a counterfeit five-dollar bill a few moments ago. Practical Joke—He! he! he! he! he! Found it out, eh? "Yes, sir; and on my information, an officer is now looking for you. Gimme five dollars in good money, and I'll throw 'im off the track. Thanks, Ta, ta!"—N. Y. Weekly.

Discouraging. "What we want," said the reformer, "is a system of government in which graft is impossible." "Yes," answered Senator Sorghum, "but even were such a condition attained, it would not last long. Some rogue would corner the harp and halo market."—Washington Star.

Impossible. "He's too ignorant to serve on a jury!" "I know a greater ignoramus than he is!" "Impossible!" "Yep, I know a man too ignorant to be a life insurance company director!"—Houston Post.

Of Recent Date. "Now, Tommy," said the fond parent, "who was it that discovered the handwriting on the wall?" "The teacher," promptly replied Tommy, "and said I did it with my new pencil, 'an' kept me in."—Chicago Daily News.

Not the Original Issue. Muggins—I hear you are about to take a flyer in matrimonial bonds. Huggins—Yes; second—mortgage bonds. Muggins—What's the answer? Huggins—I'm engaged to a widow.—Chicago Daily News.

Nothing. I make the young girl giggle. Old men get mad at me. Oh, can't you riddle my riddle? "No, nothing—don't you see?"—Philadelphia Press.

NOT SO VERY BASE. Uncle Hank—Are you a good skater Willie? Willie—Well, pretty good. I've only played hookey three times this winter for go skating.—Philadelphia Bulletin.
