ALL NEXT WEEK

The following notice is taken from one of the Hornell papers and shows the worth of this company:

"Manager Ad P. Reed, whose name has become familiar to Hornellians in his presentation of the Bennett-Moulton Company each season, made a new bid for popular favor at the Chattuck last evening in presenting the Cradoc-Neville Company, and bids fair to make good in his new venture. The S. R. O. sign was displayed early in the evening and the house was generous in its applause. The opening bill was 'Shadows of New York,' a pretty little rural drama in which the company appeared to advantage. The scenery was entirely equal to the requirements of the piece, and the effects were novel. In Miss Marie Gilmer, Mr Reed has a clever little leading woman. She is pretty and winsome. The role of Daisy Lucas is one well adapted to showing her capabilities, taking her, as it does, through the entire gamut of human emotions. John C. Bloom was natural and easy as the Rev. D. Stone, the minister of the small country place, who afterward enlarges his field in New York. The rest of the cast were for the most part competent. Some extremely clever specialties were introduced between the acts. The midget animal circus of Mr. Medvin's is something new and pleasing. He has two ponies, two monkeys and eleven dogs, all of which are trained and do some clever tricks. The magician, Van Camp, also made a great hit, for, in his line, nothing better has been here. J. C. Edwards, with his barrel jumping act, is good. He also appears in illustrated songs. Evid Delle, the little soubrette, also does a clever specialty."

A gentleman recently returned from London states that he called upon Col. Millard in his private office there, and found that he has the most elegant quarters he has been in any place. The colonel has a very large business and is receiving four times the amount of his former salary with the Carnegie company.

In a recent visit through the Imperial Tool works we were greatly surprised to find the evidences of industrial growth that was everywhere manifest. We had no idea, and we believe that the people of Athens have but a faint conception of the immense business they are doing. We found the rooms filled with the most approved machinery and one hundred men employed about the works. As the majority of the men are skilled mechanics we may be assured that they are a most desirable acquisition to the population of our town. With the rapid growth of this business it is manifest that the works must be enlarged very soon to keep up with the demands of their industries. It is a source of congratulation to note this improvement.
