and J. L. Easton, an ex-commisioner. The men were arrested on December 1, 1906, by Constable Brougham at their homes in Ridgebury township. On December 4, they were given a heraing before Justice Carey, who after listening to a vast amount of evidence for the commonwealth, continued the case until today. The defense offered no testimony except a decision rendered by Judge Fanning in the road matter, which has been the subject of litigation among certain residents of Ridgebury township for over two years. The road which is known as the Farrell road, was closed by the township commissioners on the grounds that it was but other composers, and foremost of little used and therefore burdensome o the taxpayers. Certain citizens who resided near the road were not satisfied with the findings of the home commissioners and foreign comnissioners were called to view the nissioners were called to view the oad. They concurred with the find- Sayre Rendering ngs of the home commissioners, and the latter immediately closed the road by erecting a fence at each end and also notified property owners that the road was closed and that the ownship would not be considered reponsible for damages that might folow. Shortly after the road was closed those opposed to the proceedings "Lutie," "My Unkissed Man," "Under secured a writ of certorari and the natter was thus brought before Judge Fanning. A day or two after the arest of the commissioners the judge handed down a decison sustaining the foreign commissioners, and this was offered as a defense in the crimin-
