OLIVER TO BUILD IT

Southern Contractor Awarded Canal Contract.

MUST PUT UP $5,000,000 SECURITY

Panama Waterway to Be Built on Basis of 6.75 Per Cent on Total Cost of Great Work—President For Knoxville Man.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—Following a conference at the White House, it is officially announced that the contract for building the Panama canal has been awarded to William J. Oliver, who, with Anson M. Bangs, was the lowest bidder in the recent competition, provided that within the next ten days he associates himself with at least two independent contractors whose skill and experience, combined with his own, shall cover the entire field of the work to be performed under the contract.

In the course of the negotiations William J. Oliver had informed Secretary Taft that he would not bid again on the contract should new bids be called for. He said that Mr. Stevens, whom Governor Hughes has appointed commissioner of public works for New York, would back him financially and presented a letter from Mr. Stevens in support of the statement. This may be why the government decided to accept the bid of Oliver with Bangs withdrawn from the partnership.

Mr. Oliver, whose home is in Knoxville, Tenn., has been notified that within ten days he will be required to organize a corporation for the express purpose of carrying out the proposed contract, with a capital of $5,000,000, of which not less than $1,500,000

W. J. OLIVER.

000 paid in cash and $1,500,000 in the form of solvent subscriptions shall be available for the purpose of carrying out the contract and of which the remaining $2,000,000 may be devoted to the purpose of procuring a bond, as required by the contract.

McArthur & Gillespie informed the secretary of war that if new bids were called for they would merely renew their bid at 12 1/2 per cent, as consultation had led them to decide that they could not profitably undertake the work for less.

The information gathered by Secretary Taft left the administration the alternative of accepting Mr. Oliver's offer to construct the canal for 6.75 per cent, even though it does not come from an association of contractors, or of rejecting it, with the practical certainty that it will have to accept the contract of McArthur & Gillespie at a figure not less than 12 1/2 per cent.

Secretary Taft declined to discuss the contract in detail or to indicate the feeling of the president and his advisers. In addition to the president and Secretary Taft, Secretary Root, Postmaster General Cortelyou, Assistant Secretary Bacon and James R. Garfield, commissioner of corporations, were present and for a portion of the time Chairman Knapp of the Interstate commerce commission.

President Roosevelt took the position that since Mr. Oliver had met all the requirements of the government it would be unjust to reject his bid of 6.75 per cent for the construction of the canal or even to require him to submit a new bid for the contract.

Mr. Oliver had informed the president that it was his desire to submit an independent bid for the work and that when the canal officials informed him that it would be necessary to form a partnership with some other financially responsible contractor they even went so far as to suggest that he enter into an agreement with Anson M. Bangs of New York city.

Mr. Oliver said that after receiving this suggestion from Chairman Shonts he visited the war department and was informed that Mr. Bangs would be entirely satisfactory to the government. Mr. Oliver told the president that with this assurance as to the reliability of Mr. Bangs he immediately entered into an agreement with the New York contractor.

Powerful influences, it is said, were brought to bear on the president and Secretary Taft to reject all bids and advertise for new proposals.

HORNER MURDER TRIAL

Dr. James W. Simpson Charged With Killing His Father-in-law.

RIVERHEAD, N. Y., Jan. 28.—The trial of Dr. James W. Simpson, a dentist of Fifth avenue, New York, who is charged with the murder of his father-in-law, Bartley T. Horner, a wealthy resident of Northport, N. Y., on Dec. 27, 1905, opened here today.

Dr. Simpson had been living with his wife at her father's home, and, according to the prosecution, there had been frequent quarrels in the family. On the day Mr. Horner was killed Dr. Simpson had been hunting. After supper he sat in the kitchen cleaning the gun, and while he was thus engaged Mr. Horner came into the room. Just then the dentist "broke" the gun, and it exploded, the contents of the two cartridges entering Horner's body and wounding him fatally.

At first it was believed the shooting was accidental, but later Simpson was arrested. The accused man has maintained throughout that he did not discharge the gun, but that the charge was exploded accidentally. A strange feature of the case is that the only eyewitness to the shooting, a Polish boy employed by Horner, has become insane and is now confined in an asylum.

A CAMDEN TRAGEDY.

With Arms Entwined Young Man and Woman Casually Averted Death.

CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 28.—With arms entwined an unknown young man and a young woman stood on the tracks of the Pennsylvania Electric railroad over Newton creek early in the day and calmly waited until an express train ran them down. Both were killed, their bodies were hurled into the water.

The motorman of the train saw the pair, but not until he was close upon them. He blew the whistle, but the couple made no move to escape, and the motorman could not get the train under control until he struck them. The body of the young woman, who was about twenty-five years old, was recovered and brought to the morgue here. The clothing was of fine texture, and she was of refined appearance.

The only mark that may lead to identification are the letters "W. C." on a gold watch found on the body. The body of the man has not been recovered.

Eight or ten shots were fired at him before he fell dead. None of the policemen was injured. The victim was about twenty-eight years old and well connected. Corbin's injuries are not regarded as fatal.

PUT BANON "SALOME"

Opera House Directors Want Wilde's Play Withdrawn.

J. P. MORGAN URGED BY HIS DAUGHTER

Director Conried, Defiant, Will Fight to Carry Out Contract With Richard Strauss, Who Transformed the Drama Into Opera.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—The wealthy men who own the Metropolitan Opera House have put their ban on "Salome," Oscar Wilde's play transformed into opera by the famous Richard Strauss. They have notified Herr Director Conried that they consider the opera objectionable and detrimental to the best interests of the opera house and have protested against its further presentation, which means that the second performance of the opera scheduled for next Thursday may never be given.

Director Conried, who for several weeks has been ill at his home here, received this communication from Frank N. Dodd, secretary of the company:

"The directors of the Metropolitan Opera and Real Estate company consider that the performance of 'Salome' is objectionable and detrimental to the best interests of the Metropolitan Opera House. They therefore protest against any repetition of this opera."

While comments on the daring character of the Strauss-Wilde opera have been general and as to some parts of the production, notably the "Dance of the Seven Veils" and the kissing of the head, unfavorable, such action by the real backers of opera in this city was hardly expected, and there were many theories as to its origin.

It is understood that this action on the part of the directors was directly due to a daughter of J. Pierpont Morgan. Mr. Morgan is a director in the company, and his daughter witnessed the first performance of "Salome" on Tuesday night from her father's box.

Since that time she has been persistent in urging him to try to get the opera house directors to take such action as would result in having it taken off the stage. Mr. Morgan yielded, and calling the directors together, they authorized the sending of the letter to Mr. Conried, although it was said that at first Mr. Morgan had some difficulty in getting a majority of the directors to agree with him.

George G. Haven, president of the company, said that he could see no reason for supposing that the directors would abandon the firm position they had taken.

Mr. Conried and his followers, it is said, are indignant over the episode and show no inclination to surrender. They take the stand that it was practically essential to produce the reigning musical sensation in this city and that the objections are in a line of straight laced puritanism, which New York should have outgrown. They put the situation in this way:

"Mr. Conried will not play John the Baptist to suit the whims of the real estate folks. He objects to having his own head served on a charger just because foolish persons wish it. He will fight, and he will win. He has entered into a contract with Mr. Strauss for ten performances of 'Salome' at a large expense, and he sees no reason why he should not give them."

"Salome," the music drama, was first produced in Dresden Dec. 9, 1905, and was a tremendous success. The music is Strauss', but the book is Oscar Wilde's notorious play somewhat reduced.

The actual expense of production, so far as costumes, scenery and like expenditures are concerned, amounts to about $20,000. The first performance netted Mr. Conried, for whose benefit it was given, about $22,000.

The drama concerns itself with the Biblical story of John the Baptist and Salome, the daughter of Herodias, who conceived it. Three features in the drama have presented themselves as objectionable to many. First, the so-called "Dance of the Seven Veils," which is a sort of sublimated dance du ventre, almost entirely composed of themes from the opera woven together to express Salome's feelings; second, the kissing of the severed head of John the Baptist, which has been described as the most repulsive scene ever put on the stage; third, the use of a Biblical subject on the stage.

The dance and the kissing of the head were both given in the most realistic manner at the Metropolitan. Mr. Hurrian, who took part in the Dresden performances, says that they were not softened at all there either—that they were quite as realistic in disgusting detail.

The Oscar Wilde play has just been done in New York by Mercedes Leigh. In May, 1905, the New York State society gave what is believed to be the only other American production.

HIS GOODBY TO ENGLAND.

There was a large company present under the presidency of Harry Nutall, M. P. Mr. Bryce, replying to a toast to his health, referred to Great Britain's good relations with all the powers and added:

"There is one friendship which is of especial value to all of us. I refer to the United States. I am happy to think our relations with that country never have been better. Never, indeed, do I think they have been so good as they are to-day."

AMBASSADOR JAMES BRYCE.

They are at this moment. The incident fresh in your memory need be referred to only for the sake of saying that the moral are about forty-five years old, things are now, happily, from those when an incident like that would have been the signal of cries of degradation in the press of both countries. Fortunately in both countries no one took this matter as anything but an occasion wherein we could show our trust in one another.

"I have the honor of being selected to represent this government in the United States, but not only this government, but the English people desire the closest friendship with the United States."

"I am confident that the Irish problem will be solved and that speedily."

Demented Man Attempts Murder.

Mrs. Appo was taken to the hospital at New London in a dying condition, the bullet having pierced the abdomen. Ward is said to be demented. He admitted shooting a woman, but when asked the reason said that when a boy he learned the "secret code of women and their thoughts." The prisoner stated that he was subject to frequent attacks of weakness and at such times was not accountable for his actions. He later told how he had shot at Mrs. Appo through a window. Her husband was absent at the time.

THE THAW TRAGEDY

Court Session Taken Up With Selection of Jurors.

PASTOR TELLS OF "PACE THAT KILLS"

Rev. Madison Peters Draws Moral to Warn Young Men and Women of Stain That Mars Our American Life.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—The trial of Harry K. Thaw for the killing of Stanford White was resumed here today with the examination of talemans for the jury, five being yet required to complete it.

Dr. Madison C. Peters in his sermon in the Majestic theater pointed out some lessons which, he said, needed to be learned from the Thaw-White tragedy and emphasized the fact that had young Thaw but learned some of these lessons himself he would not today be an accused murderer in a prison cell. He continued:

"There are many of his kind in New York today who are going the pace that kills, youths whose pockets are plethoric with money they never earned and money oftentimes coined out of the blood of the poor.

"If all the evidence is brought out we will have written during this trial the blackest page that has ever stained our American life. It will tell a story of crimes worse than murder, the story of men of large wealth who are making it their business to degrade womanhood, turning the rotting force of wealth to the corruption of innocent girlhood whose only misfortune is its poverty.

"Sad to say, there are too many among us who look with lustful longing upon every innocent girl who has beauty enough to attract their attention, men who use the power of their money in seeking to encompass her ruin and who ever partake of a changing feast where virtue is the first dish.

"Men about town have for years freely discussed what has now become public property through the pistol shot of revenge. Our attention is once again called to the parent ruined youths who through their inherited wealth are cursing our country today and giving it an unsavory reputation among the nations of the world.

"This city is full of prowling wolves seeking the spotless lamb, unclean jackals of concupiscence who are planning hourly to entrap innocence to destruction.

"Disgusting as will be the details of the present trial, nevertheless it will work good in the end if the people learn the practices of the so called high life of New York—high life run low.

"The lesson which neither White nor Thaw ever learned was that of self control."
