Cleveland's Weakness.

"A N. Y. Democrat', in Chicago Herald (Dem.) The Democratic party desires to nominate a man for president in 1892 who can be elected, and who when elected will be a worthy exponent of its doctrines, faithful to his party and a good executive officer. It has no other ambition than this, and it has many men from whom to choose. But the friends of Mr. Cleveland are advancing his name with great vehemence, and are name with great vehemence, and are denouncing those who do not share denouncing those who do not share their views as to his popularity and the need of his re-election. Herein they commit again the blunder of they commit again the blunder of 1888, where for months before the gave Palmer 12,000 more Demoholding of the St. Louis Convention gave Palmer 12,000 more Demothey declared that no man besides Mr. Cleveland could possibly be elected president. Every other element and interest of the party were sacrificed to the advancement of Mr. Cleveland. Criticisms of his course were looked upon as party treason, any man who dared to differ from him upon questions of policy was looked upon as a party traitor. All the resources of party discipline were brought to bear to make the real issue of the year the support of Mr. Cleveland.

These efforts were successful; no other man was mentioned in the convention, or for weeks in advance of the holding of the convention. The Democratic party entered the convention with no independent purpose. Intelligent discussion disappeared. The cut and dried programme was carried out which nominated Mr. Cleveland by acclamation; adopted the platform which he had caused to be written out in the White House by acclamation and without debate; and nominated the man whom he had chosen for vicepresidential associate by an overwhelming majority. To accomplish this the whole power of the federal Administration was brought to bear upon the Democratic organization. and the consequence was the substitution of the will of one man for the intelligent and thoughtful counsel of a great party. A more fatal error could not befall a great party aspiring to administer the affairs of a free government. Nor would this condition of affairs have been created by a man who was a great leader. It was a condition intolerable to freemen.

As much has been said of late about the fact that Mr. Cleveland had a plurality over Mr. Harrison, and as it is sought to be argued therefrom that he was greatly and personally popular, an analysis of this matter will not be without its value. Mr. Tilden's popular popularity in 1876 was 250,000, that of Mr. Cleveland, after four years of votes given to Mr. Cleveland in Merchant mill, Billet mill, Exper-1884. 516,226 were majorities obtained in the Southern states, show-Boiler shop, Frog and switch shop, monwealths his popular vote was 420,000 less than than of Mr. Harrison; and it was in the Northern Democratic states that Mr. Clevetheir material, and employ from the material execution. Democratic states that Mr. Cleve-their material, and employ from in the South. And since this question of majorities is being used so much by those who insist upon the nomination of Mr. Cleveland in 1892 we should give the matter turther and more careful consideration. If anything can be demonstrated by the results it would appear that Mr. Cleveland's fatal weakness was with the Democracy, whom he did not comprehend, and 1888 carefully and dispassionately, with a view to determining what should be the future action of the Democratic party, will rise from that study with the conviction graven upon his heart that Mr. graven upon his heart that Mr. quested to call and prove property

There is no doubt but that boodle to use the modern phrase, played an that boodle would not have prevailed in a contest against a man who was enshrined in the hearts of the Democracy. The losses of Mr. Cleveland was not generally in the boodle districts, not in the cities, which are supposed peculiarly to be the home of the boodlers, but they occured in the country regions and at the cross-roads, where men were voting their fellings and where they gave expression to their resent-ments. The heart of the Demoments. The heart of the Demoments. The heart of the Demo-cracy was not in the campaign and Sunday last with several railroad authorities. They in company with the result demonstrated that the silent vote which had been alienated, as in the Democratic counties of Illinois, was not swept from its Democratic alienating by the use of money, but by alienating affections dreary for considerable time past of the Democratic voters.
