For the first time in thirty centuries of history a race not white, living with a white race, has been given full political privileges under a free government.

This was just. But justice is inexorable, and freedom knows no compromises. Having obeyed one and honored the claims of the other. we can take no steps backward. Unsettled questions have no mercy for the peace of nations. There is no safety save in justice. If it was not statesmanship it was something higher than state craftthe higher law of God and man It may not have been "practical politics," but it was the inexorable decree of fate, heard at last in war and written in blood.

The plea which has been made will not be silenced. The blood which smokes in Southern clearings will rise in future punishment. The voice of the oppressed is heard at a tribunal where no quibbles over Constitutional trammels are accepted in abatement of justice. The tyrant's plea of necssity never yet evaded or avoided the sure penalty of oppression. How this great wrong will be at last remedtred and redressed Senator Ingalls does not say.
