What of the Future?

If the Republicans of Pennsylvania had their battle at the polls to fight over a gain we very much doubt if it would result as it has. They were warned that they would be doing a very dangerous thing if they allowed Delamater to be defeated. While perhaps there was a general anticipation that the next House of Representatives would be Democratic it is doubtful if even the wildest Democratic dream ever contemplated such widespread Republican defeat in the nation. In the light of the returns from all over the country, it may be well to pause and ask: What of the future?

That it is full of danger to the protection must be admitted by all who seriously consider the situation. The Republicans could easily stand a Democratic House and benefit by it. But when State governments and State Legislatures are swept from their Republican moorings and Republican United States Senators are defeated there is trouble in store which must be met by wise judgment and careful leadership. The next House will settle down with a two-thirds Democratic majority—sufficient to pass a bill over the President's veto. The next Senate will have a greatly reduced Republican majority. New York, Illinois, Wisconsin, Kansas and South Dakota, now promises to reduce the majority to four. Other States are close and but two more changes are necessary to make the Senate a tie. Under such circumstances renewed agitation of legislation similar to the Mills' bill, even if nothing more radical, is assured. That there are Republican Senators, notably Plumb Paddock and Pettigrew, who will take the opportunity to assail the McKinley bill, is certain. It may not be known to many, but it is a fact that Senator Plumb, on a recent visit to this city, declared openly to the Republican party leaders that should Pennsylvania break away from the Republican column, he and a dozen other Senators would have no hesitation in breaking away from the McKinley bill. It is pretty hard to believe that the Senate, even with its known opposition to the McKinley bill, could follow the House in a two-thirds vote to override the President's veto of a possible repeal of the bill. We do not believe that Mr. Plumb and his associates would dare to go that far. But, allowing that the bill is safe until the expiration of President Harrison's term, what have the friends of protection to hope from the elections of 1892?

If the Democratic majority is given plenty of rope in the coming Congress it will damage itself greatly. It always does that. Again, by '92 the present flurry over the Tariff bill will have disappeared. The bill has been unfairly used by unscrupulous persons to frighten the farmer and the laborer into the belief that greatly advanced prices are to come. Advantage has been taken of the flurry to mark up prices on domestic goods entirely untouched by tariff duties. All this deception will soon be fully understood. Long before the next election the great benefits of the bill will become apparent and strength will be added to the Republican party in the very places where it is now weak. The great danger to the Congress to be elected two years from now does not lie in the tariff, but in the partisan gerrymanders of Republican States by Democratic Legislatures, an example of which we have just had in Ohio.

With State after State handing over its Legislature to the Democrats, the Republicans have got to face Congress districts mapped out for the sole purpose of legislating Republicans out of office. And not only this, but there is real danger that the Senate may lose the very slight majority it retains out of the campaign just closed. New York, Wisconsin and Michigan have elected Democratic Legislatures and Minnesota is in the hands of Farmers' Alliance. In each of these States the Legislature to be elected in '92 will choose a United States Senator. It may be looked upon as settled that desperate efforts will be made not only to gerrymander Congress but Legislative districts, with the object of retaining control in the Presidential year. These efforts may not in all instances prove successful, but it must be conceded that there is an element of danger and that a Republican President must be looked to make protection absolutely safe.

It is easy enough for Pennsylvania to explain to each other that the contest was only a local issue, but how is that claim to be impressed upon outside States? Massachusetts has gone Democratic in spite of its long time Republican majorities. How many people stop to think that it was only a local issue that caused the revolt? New York promises to elect a Democratic United States Senator in place of Senator Evarts. The immense Republican majority of Kansas has been swept away and Senator Ingalls retired. Who stops to think that it was the Bennett law—a local issue—that has handed Wisconsin over to the Democrats? The Republican candidate in Michigan was unpopular and local issues aided his defeat. But among the great mass of readers how many really understand the situation there? Then how explain the result in Pennsylvania? Delamater is defeated and the rest of the ticket elected by a very much reduced majority. But to the thousand and thousands who look only to results and never analyze the causes Pennsylvania takes her place among Democratic States, adds four Democratic Congressmen, and has a most narrow escape from adding three or four more. Pennsylvania has come out of the fight in a much better condition than most of the States, but it would have been only the part of wisdom to have kept her sturdily Republican, facing definitely and hopefully the free trade advance. Now she has got to go into another fight, which is bound to be a struggle to the death between protection and free trade. All over the Union the free-traders are shouting their cries of victory. The issue is plain. "Tariff reform" of an advanced type is called for. "Let none misinterpret the emphatic voice of the voters," says the Philadelphia Times; "it is against the McKinley bill; it is for tariff revision even below the standard of the Mills bill." Ex-President Cleveland has thrown himself into the contest and is openly and avowedly a candidate for the Democratic nomination. The struggle is bound to come, and the question now must be, who among the Republican leaders is best fitted to lead the Republican hosts of protection against the free trade army? Is it President Harrison? Is it McKinley, the author of the bill which bears his name? Or is it James G. Blaine, upon a platform based upon his ideas of reciprocity which promise protection with a free but not free trade?

We believe that the Republican party can carry the next Presidential election, but no mistakes must be made. What has been done cannot be undone. The hope for the future is in Republican unity. Let us have it.

Tests of Professor Koch's Great Discovery. Hope for Dying Consumptives.

BERLIN, Nov. 9.—Professor Bergemann inoculated fifteen consumptive patients on Thursday by Professor Koch's process, and on the following day exhibited one of the patients before a number of physicians, in order to show the change that had resulted within twenty-four hours. The Borsen Courier says it has authority for the statement that Professor Koch's remedy has proved to be a success. A famous German surgeon, it says, cured within five days a case of lues, or necrotic tubercular destruction of the tissues of the face.

The National Zeitung says that Professor Koch, although he has performed a number of cures, does not yet consider the time come for the publication of his researches, although the remedy has been applied to patients in the charity hospital and in some private cases. Its composition remains a profound secret.

Pianos Organs.

The improved method of fastening strings of Pianos, invented by us, is one of the most important improvements ever made, making the instrument more richly musical in tone, more durable, and less liable to get out of tone. Both the Mason & Hamlin Organs and Pianos excel chiefly in that which is the chief excellence in any musical instrument, quality of tone. Other things, though important, are much less so than this. An instrument with unequalled tone cannot be good. Illustrated catalogues of new styles, introduced this season sent free.
