His First Boar.

A Russian officer at one of the military stations in the Caucasus hearing of the presence in his neighborhood of two gentlemen in pursuit of boar, sent to them an invitation to join him on the following day, when he would give them a taste of real sport. With many thanks they accepted the kindness, and at the appointed time set off.

During the day many shots were fired at one thing and another, though at least one of the party had seen no boar. As the afternoon wore on and the daylight began to disappear, one of the Russian's began to disappear, one of the Russian's guests, who had wandered away from his friends, found himself rather fagged, and felt that it was time to stop.

Just then he heard the dogs baying something not far from him, and after comething not far from him, and after creeping up to within thirty yards of them, he crouched behind the bole of a huge oak, and waited for his eyes to get used to the darkness. He was soon get used to the darkness. He was soon able to make out the dogs' tails waving to and fro, and then, under a leaning tree-stump, the indistinct outline of their enemy. Meantime, the boar kept up a half-grunting, half-growling noise, while the dogs barked their loudest.

"Suddenly," says the gentleman, "the mass moved, and a dog went flying, and his yells were added to the discord. But his yells were added to the discord. But this movement of the boar's was fatal to him; it brought him into a more open position, and I rolled him over with my 'express.' He rose and tried to charge, but though I fired again, I believe it was unnecessary, as he was too hard hit ever to have reached me.

"This was the first really large game I had killed, and I rushed up to him with the delight of a boy. I had never seen a wild boar before this morning, and now, as I contemplated my fallen foe, a strange uneasiness beset me. There was something so homely in the innocent face of that dead pig that my heart for a moment misgave me; but I benished my foolish qualms, the remy heart for a moment misgave net but I banished my foolish qualms, the re-action after my triumph, probably, and as I heard the tootle of my friend's horn ap-proach, I sat down on the broad side of my game, and indulged in a victorious noo-oop.
..The bushes parted asunder, and my host burst into a cheer and loaded me with praise. But alas! What is this? As my friend approached nearer, slowly the gay smile fades; the applauding voice is still; the horn drops from his nerveless grasp, and the merry little visage lengthens out in a telescope fashion truly uncomfortable to behold.

Turf Cutting in Ireland.

Turf Cutting in Ireland.

Among the chief characteristic features of Ireland are the extensive peat moors that occupy a principal portion of the center of the island, the most important of which is the great bog of Allen. Its original extent comprised 1,000,000 acres; but by cultivation its size has been considerably diminished. In the form of a table-land, it rises 270 feet above the level of the sca, extends within twenty miles of Dublin, through King's County, reaching east and west beyond the Shannon into the counties of Galway and Roscommon, and spreads through Meath and Westmeath north, and south into the Queen's County and Tipperary. Two important towns occupy the center of the bog—Tullamore and Philipstown—and the arteries by which the turf is conveyed to the city of Dublin are the Grand Canal and the Royal Canal.

Royal Canal.

A weird spot for the wayfarer is that wild moreland; here and there he comes across a primitive attempt at a habitation, half burrow, half hut—it is the miserable hovel of the turf cutter, the tenant of a few acres; he selects a dry, sheltered nook, burrows a floor, erects a few bogwood stakes and forms a roof with heath and rushes, leaving a hole Royal Canal. a few bogwood stakes and forms a roof with heath and rushes, leaving a hole that serves for a chimney. From this wretched shanty he and the various members of his family issue forth to their daily toil of preparing the turf for the various markets.

The saving of the turf consists of six operations, cutting averaging, forting operations—cutting, spreading, footing, rickling, clamping, and drawing home. A day's work is called a "dark." One A day's work is called a "dark." One man generally goes before the eutter and levels the banks, if necessary. Another man attends to the barrows and wheels the turf to the spreading field. The spreading is generally accomplished by women and children; in favorable weather it lies for about a week baying been women and children; in favorable weather it lies for about a week, having been turned in the meantime to dry the other sides. Then it is ready for footing—a process of setting in small stacks of about twelve sods each. In this condition it is left for a period of about ten days, after which the turf is rickled. Rickling consists of placing about twelve footings on their sides, one turf deep, and about two feet high. Having remained so till it is thoroughly dry, it is mained so till it is thoroughly dry, it is then stored in clamps or stacks of from then stored in clamps or stacks of from twelve to thirty feet long and of propor-tion height and depth, and in this form it lies on the banks of the canals till it is removed in the barges to the city market or brought in the smaller turf cots to be vended in the streets of Athlone and other towns on the river Shannon. Some other towns on the river shannow enterprising firms have within the past three years engaged in the manufacture of peat litter in the bog of Allen, and speculation in this direction has so far proved profitable to the speculators.—

Pelted the General With Bread.

Privates of the garrison at Avignon, France, amused themselves one recent afternoon by throwing hard army bread from the barrick windows at passing civilians. In the midst of the sport a tall, elegantly dressed man in a high hat came in sight. A chunk of bread knocked off his hat. He saw the soldiers at the windows and without waiting to pick up his hat walked into the barracks. Two minutes later the soldiers learned that he Astonishing Fecundity of Codfish.

It is said that between 60,000,000,000 and 100,000,000,000 codfishes are taken from the sea around the shores of Newfoundland every year. But even that quantity seems small when we consider that a single cod yields something like 3,500,000 eggs each year, and that over 8,000,000 eggs have been found in the roe of a single cod. A herring of six or seven ounces in weight is provided with 30,000,000 ova. After making all reasonable allowances for the destruction of eggs and of the young, it has been calculated that in three years a single-pair of herrings would produce 154,000,000. Buffon once said that if a pair of herrings were left to breed and multiply undisturbed for a period twenty years, they would yield a fish-bulk equal to the size of our globe!—St. Louis Republic.
