

ODD FACTS ABOUT BRUTES.

MATTERS OF INTEREST NOT GENERALLY KNOWN.

Ants Put to a Peculiar Use—Tigers Braver Than Lions—All Wild Animals Are Far-sighted.

The grip of an ant's jaw is retained even after the body has been bitten off and nothing but the head remains. This knowledge is possessed by a certain tribe of Indians in Brazil, who put the ants to a very peculiar use. When an Indian gets a gash cut in his hand, instead of having his hand sewn together, as physicians do in this country, he procures five or six large black ants, and holding their heads near the gash, they bring their jaws together in biting the flesh, and thus pull the two sides of the gash together. Then the Indian pinches off the bodies of the ants and leaves the heads clinging to the flesh, which is held together until the gash is perfectly healed.

A pair of rats, happily situated and undisturbed, will in three years, have increased to 656,808. Calculating that ten rats eat as much in one day as a man, which, we think, is rather under than over the fact, the consumption of these rats would be equal to that of 65,680 men the year round and leave eight rats in the year to spare. Multiplying in this rapid way, it is providential that the rat has so many natural enemies. All these to the contrary notwithstanding, he often proves sufficiently troublesome to make the community conspire against him. In Ireland they singe the hair of a rat which has been caught, but it is otherwise unharmed. In Germany they let one loose with a small bell attached to his neck. The tinkling of this, as the belled rat chases his friends, produces a panic among them and causes them to flee the premises.

The Bengal tiger has more courage than the lion, according to a showman, who states that the matter was tested in this manner: "We placed a shooting cracker in the respective cages and fired the fuses. As soon as the fuses began to burn they attracted the attention of both animals, but in a widely different manner. The lion drew into a corner and watched the proceedings with a distrustful and uneasy eye. The tiger, on the contrary, advanced to the burning fuse with a firm step and unflinching gaze. On reaching the cracker he took his paw and began to roll it over the floor, and when it exploded beneath his very nose he did not flinch, but continued his examination until perfectly satisfied. The lion betrayed great fear when he heard the report of the explosion, and for quite a time could not be coaxed out of his den."

A curious communication has been made to the "Academie de Medicine" by M. Motais of Angiers, whose works on the various diseases of the eye are highly esteemed. He has closely examined the effect of captivity on the sight of wild beasts, such as lions, tigers, etc., and asserts that all animals in a savage state are far-sighted. The same remark applies to man in an uncivilized state, and even to those who, though civilized, follow vocations which oblige them to remain constantly in the open air, such as sailors or farm laborers. The same faculty exists in caged animals, when they have been taken after the age of six or eight months; but when born in captivity or kept in cages when very young they become nearsighted, which M. Motais attributes to the narrow space in which they are confined and the training which obliges them to follow the eye of the keeper or trainer to obey his will. The nearsightedness of school children may, in his opinion, be ascribed to the same cause—the habit of concentrating the sight on one point, and the fact that the power of the visual organ becomes modified according to the requirements to which it is subjected.

Many stories told of the crafty fox are doubtless incidents of the imagination. But a recent writer tells an anecdote which, though taxing belief, he says is vouched for by an eyewitness of the affair. Some fishermen on the west coast of Ireland were in the habit of going to a small island, a few hundred yards from the mainland, in quest of bait. The island was inhabited by large numbers of rabbits, and could be reached at low tide by wading, the water there being only a few inches deep. One morning they went in their boat quite early, it being high tide, and on landing saw a dead fox lying on the beach. The fur of the animal was all bedraggled, and he seemed to have been drowned. One of the men, remarking that his skin was worth something, pitched him into the boat. Procuring their bait they returned to the mainland, and the man who had possessed himself of the fox seized him by the tail and flung him on shore. As soon as the animal struck the beach he picked himself up with considerable agility for a dead fox and shot off like a flash up among the cliffs, while the men stood staring at each other in mute astonishment. The men concluded that he had crossed over to the island during the night, when the tide was low, in search of rabbits, and, finding in the morning that he was cut off from the mainland, counterfeited death, with the expectation of thereby procuring a passage to the shore in a boat, an expectation which was fully realized.

In the island of Ceylon the people are very fond of elephant hunting. They begin by clearing an open space near a forest, which is strongly fenced in with trunks of trees, with open places for doors. This is called a corral. When so much of the work is done the natives get behind and around the elephants with blazing torches, shaking spears and rattling all kinds of noisy instruments in order to frighten the huge animals while all the time driving them toward the open doors of the corral. At last with a rush the great herd enter, the entrances are barred, and the poor giants of the woods find themselves hopelessly imprisoned. An elephant's rage is dreadful to witness, but the ingenuity of man has found a way of subduing it. One by one each prisoner is freed again, and tame elephants, remarkable for their sagacity, come up to him, stroke him with their trunks, and otherwise cajole him until they lead him on to a good, strong tree. The natives creep up behind, and in a minute a rope with a running knot is round the elephant's leg and made fast to a tree. All the time this is going on the tame elephants are humoring their deluded victim, but as soon as he is secured they go away and leave him, which is a shabby trick. Then the men bring him nice coconuts and leaves to eat, which, of course, he refuses, as he is again in a great passion and struggling to be free. But hunger subdues even the fiercest, and at last his wild roaring ceases to resound through the woods and he is forced to eat. From that time the taming process is comparatively easy; again and again he is fed, as he requires it, by a kind hand; and the elephant, susceptible to kindness, becomes at last a docile servant of man.—Boston Courier.

WISE WORDS.

Repentance never comes too late, if it comes from the heart.

There is glory in anything you do simply from a sense of duty.

Men need moral courage more than they do higher foreheads.

Health may be wealth, but it is pretty hard to make the doctors believe it.

If an alligator could talk, he would probably declare he had a small mouth.

How many people there are whose souls lay in them like a pith in a goose quill!

The first proof of a man's incapacity for anything is his endeavoring to fix the stigma of failure upon others.

To judge human character rightly, a man may sometimes have very small experience provided he has a very large heart.

Every day is a leaf in life. When the day dawns it is a blank. There is inscribed thereon our thoughts, words and actions.

That which is easy to do, though it may be worth doing, is not so important as that which is hard and disagreeable, and which therefore finds few workers.

Equality is the life of conversation; and he is as much out who assumes to himself any part above another, as he who considers himself below the rest of the society.

There are always two ways of looking at a thing. The man who walks so slowly along a narrow sidewalk that he impedes the progress of the man behind him is regarded as a pestilential nuisance; whereas to the slow walker it is the impatient rapid walker who makes all the trouble and renders life a burden.

Curious Facts About Ice.

Did you ever wonder why it is that ice, being formed of congealed water, floats? And why, on some still lakes, it begins to form at the bottom before it does on the surface? Scientists explain these enigmas thus: Ice is specifically lighter than water just about to freeze, and, therefore, floats in it. This is the one reason why the formation of ice usually begins at the surface. Another is its peculiar law of expansion. The general law is that cold induces expansion; this law holds good with water only to a certain point. When water has cooled down to within 7.4 degrees of freezing it ceases to contract as before with increase of cold and begins to expand till it freezes.

This expansion causes the colder portions of the water to rise to the surface. The formation of "ground ice," or "anchor ice," as it is sometimes called, is the only exception to the rule given above. The whole body of water is at the same time cooled to below the freezing point, and the substances at the bottom, the stones and gravel of the river or lake bed, serve as a point of congelation or crystallization for the water.

Ground ice may be the lowest stratum of the once completely frozen mass of water, retained at the bottom by the natural cohesion to the rough substances of the river-bed, during the thawing and melting of the ice on the surface; or it may even be formed under favorable conditions beneath briskly flowing water, probably by the action of eddies, which draws the surface water down through the warmer but denser liquid, thus cooling the rocks at the bottom, forming a base for its formation. This remarkable species of ice usually gathers on a clear, cold night, when the surface of the water is not frozen.—St. Louis Republic.

"A Feather in His Cap."

"A feather in his cap," signifying honor and distinction, arose from the custom prevalent among the ancient Syrians, and perpetuated to-day among the various savage or semi-civilized tribes of Asia and America, of adding a new feather to their headgear for every enemy slain. In the days of chivalry the maiden knight received his casque featherless, and won his plumes as he had won his spurs. In a manuscript written by Richard Hensard in 1598, and preserved in the British Museum, it is said of the Hungarians that it had been an ancient custom among them that none should wear a feather but he who had killed a Turk, and to such only it was lawful to show the number of feathers in their caps. In Scotland and Wales it is still customary for the sportsman who kills his first woodchuck to pluck out a feather and stick it in his cap.—Boston Transcript.

A Pea Cannery.

The canning factory at Grand Island, Neb., has 140 men canning peas, and the output of peas will be close to 500,000 cans. It expects to finish with peas this week and put them in shape for sweet corn. Two threshers are run and the peas are threshed from the vine as thoroughly as the wheat from the straw, the peas being cut or pulled and hauled to the factory on the vine, avoiding all handling by hand, making a vast saving in expense.—Chicago Herald.

NEWS AND NOTES FOR WOMEN.

Black silk handkerchiefs have again been brought out, but will hardly gain favor.

Chocolate is said to be the favorite drink with women as well their favorite candy.

Anz Shaw, the woman preacher, says she wears short hair simply because she was born that way.

When the ex-Empress Eugenie was asked at Cap Martin, near Mentone, the other day to fill out a census blank this is how she did it: "Comtesse de Pierreponts (Marie Eugenie), sixty-four years of age; born in Granada, Spain; naturalized French; widow; traveling."

New toilet sets are in opaque white and gold, with the monogram in gold letters on the side of the pitcher. Others are in novel shape, one having an oblong bowl, with the pitcher in most curious shape, low and long, with a broad nose, the whole resting on a brass stand, on which it can be turned, instead of being lifted to pour the water.

Some of the handsome black costumes of the season show costly black lace coats in the deep Louis XIV. style open over very rich vests of gold embroidered faille. Some of the vests are of gold-dotted silk net arranged with a blouse effect; others are of lustrous corded silk striped with gold gimps, these gimps being made of genuine gold threads.

Checked or striped gingham, for misses show the waist with the neck cut away, as though a square guimpe were designed to fill it, but instead there will be a full rill of rows of very narrow lace, which is also used in a dozen rows on a pointed cape effect, laid over the top of a full puffed sleeve, which terminates, without trimming, just below the elbow.

The new bridesmaid's present is the lucky slipper brooch, made of gold, with a true lover's knot in jewels on the toe and red enamelled heels. The pin is enclosed in a case, made also in the shape of a shoe. Another gift, dear to the heart of the maid of honor, is a case of lace pins, usually of half a dozen of the convenient little ornaments, each set with a different colored stone.

Rain water, it is well known, is the best cosmetic. A good substitute is to let some orange, lemon or cucumber peel soak in water used to wash the face. This need not be especially prepared for every abluition. Keep a wide-mouthed bottle or jar of it on your toilet stand and use daily for the face. It softens the skin and gives a becoming glow, while healthfully stimulating the action of the skin.

Some ingenious person has patented and put on sale a flatiron which especially commends itself to women who board or any who employ dressmakers in their homes. It is made with an opening in the upper part and is hollow inside. Within are placed blocks of a new sort of fuel which comes in little cakes, and when these are lighted they will burn for six hours and keep the iron well heated all the time.

The short woman will have a very sad summer if she hasn't a soul above her garments. Deep, basque jackets, three-quarter capes, frills, and panniers, while very pretty on the tall, slight woman, approach the ridiculous on a woman less than five feet four. The choice lies between being out of the fashion or being caricatures of the mode, though occasionally a happy compromise is ingeniously carried out by some exceptionally clever woman.

I Lost

My confidence was all run down and unable to work—in an extreme condition of general debility, when I was told that Hood's Sarsaparilla was just what I needed. As a drowning man grasps at a straw I decided to try this medicine, and to my great surprise, from the first day I began to improve. By the time I had finished my second bottle I had regained my health and strength, and from that day I can say I have been perfectly well. I have recommended Hood's Sarsaparilla to my friends, whom I know have been benefited by it. It is indeed peculiar to itself, in that

When Picnics Were New.

There are some fashions that time only enhances and improves. The Annual Register, 1802, informed its readers that a new kind of entertainment had come into fashion, called picnic suppers, where a variety of dishes were set down on a list, and the members of the company each drew one, and whoever drew that particular dish was expected to furnish it for the entertainment of the others. The old way of spelling it was picnic.—Detroit Free Press.

An Operator's Amusing Blunder.

Thirty pupils of a deaf and dumb school in Virginia started for home over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad the other week. The conductor of the train telegraphed to Parkersburg: "I have thirty mutes on board. Please be prepared to receive them." The dispatch was received all right, but the operator read it mules instead of mutes. Two cattle cars of the most approved pattern were awaiting his train as he pulled into Parkersburg.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Oregon Enigma.

Surveyors exploring the valley of the John Day River in Eastern Oregon came across a sculptured rock covered with basrelief heads of "anthropoid ages," and archeologists have ever since been puzzled to decide whether the originals of those zoological emblems ranged the woods of Western America or Eastern Asia. Is it not just possible that the problematic sculptures represent ape-like men rather than man-like apes?—New York Voice.

About three years ago my little boy three years old was confined to his bed with what the doctors pronounced inflammatory rheumatism in his left leg.
