

PICTURESQUE SANTIAGO.

THE BEAUTIFUL LOCATION OF THE CHILEAN CAPITAL.

Fire-places Almost Unknown—Grand Public Walks—A Unique Structure—Dress of Chilean Women.

The cities that can boast of a more delightful climate or grander scenery than this are few, writes Fannie Ward from Santiago de Chile. Though barely 1800 feet above the sea, it is far enough from the equator to escape excessive heat, yet not so distant as to be subject to extreme cold.

The country immediately surrounding the Capital is made up of small estates, with handsome villas upon them, belonging to wealthy families who have the good taste to forsake the city's glare in summer-time for a few months of rural living.

The tourist coming down from the tropics, feels exhilarated by the climate of Santiago. Benjamin Taylor, in his "Between the Gates," describes it exactly, for nowhere are the seasons more neighborly.

There is downright discomfort here during the cold days of the rainy season. The people have a deep-seated notion that fires indoors breed diseases of every sort, and except in houses built by English or American residents there is hardly a stove, grate or fire-place to be found in all Chile.

Perhaps the object which attracts most attention is one of those horrible "pressed heads," the work of the Jivero Indians of Ecuador—the flesh of a human head, from which the skull has been removed, shrunken to the size of a fist, yet the features preserved with lifelike expression, eye-brows intact, lips sewn together, gaudy feathers pendant from the ears, and long black hair concealing the pike upon which this ghastly trophy of savage warfare is impaled.

WISE WORDS.

Indolence abhors exercise.

The spark of envy kindles the fires of hate.

If pains are taken satisfaction should be given.

It is easier to refuse another than to deny self.

Even those who live high are not out of harm's reach.

Hope will not revive until confidence has been restored.

The man who wants nothing could not possibly wish for less.

He whose wit is his livelihood can ill afford to be out of humor.

The eye telegraphs its message of love; the tongue expresses the sentiment.

He that speaketh against his own reason speaks against his own conscience.

The wrong-doer may succeed in eluding justice only to be overtaken by remorse.

At present let us remove what is bad, which must be done before good of any kind can spring up.

Sense shines with a double lustre when it is set in humility. An able yet humble man is a jewel worth a kingdom.

Though truthful utterance is worthy of highest commendation, it cannot be denied that a lying tongue would be better still.

Bad temper is its own scourge. Few things are bitterer than to feel bitter. A man's venom poisons himself more than his victim.

Santiago is especially blessed with paseos, or public walks. Besides the incomparable Alameda the central plaza with its envying arcades and portales, and beautiful Santa Lucia, there is the Tajamar lying along the banks of the Mapocho, which used to be the favorite resort before the Alameda was completed.

Though many cities have extensive and beautiful botanical and zoological gardens, there are few which can show anything like this of Santiago—and I doubt if its equal, in area and the value and variety of its buildings, can be found anywhere in the world.

It contains not only a vast botanical garden, laid out on a grand scale, with little lakes crossed by rustic bridges, a wilderness of blossoming plants, vines and shrubs, towering oaks and pines, statuary, shaded nooks, well-kept walks and plenty of rustic benches, and the greenest of swad without a single placard (so frequently met with at home) saying "Keep off the grass," and in an extensive zoological park, containing all the animals of South America and many others, conveniently arranged for observation in long avenues; but a magnificent museum, an underground, grotto-like structure containing innumerable glass tanks full of fish swimming in water supplied by hidden fountains; an agricultural college, with a handsome museum of its own and a long line of buildings devoted to its various offices; an enormous new normal school, capable of holding 2000 pupils, besides the teachers and their families, who, supported by the Government, are all to be housed and fed under the same roof, and a variety of other edifices too numerous to mention.

One of the most unique structures in the Quinta is one contributed by Senora Cousino—half castle, half pagoda—built entirely of glass bottles, bits of iron ore and square chunks of coal, cupola, balconies and all, representing the family enterprises—the coal mines, iron foundries and bottle factories at Zota, the wine manufactured on their various estates and the celebrated "Cousino beer." Besides music stands, and dancing pavilions, there is a luncheon pavilion, with open sides and awning-shaded porticoes, where parties may be served at little tables with ices, wines, fruits and other light refreshment.

There is also a big restaurant, which is justly famous for its breakfasts and dinners—the former served between 10 A. M. and 2 o'clock, and the latter from 5 P. M. as late as a possible customer remains. Through the cooks are French, Chilean styles prevail in the food and its serving. Among other delicacies they give you cameros, or fresh water crabs, shrimps with long black hairs on the plump of white-breasted partridges, tiny brown birds on toast, "sea-urchins" steamed in their own round, prickly shells, strange fruits and salads.

Chile's National Museum is housed in the imposing building in which the International Exhibition of 1875 was held. The collection of birds is the finest I ever saw, from the tiniest hummingbird hardly an inch long; to the giant albatross and huge Andean condors, golden pheasants, fantailed lyre birds, ichthyas, hooded birds of paradise—millions of them, and a whole large room devoted to their nests and eggs. Besides all things usually found, in museums, there is a magnificent array of aboriginal pottery; utensils and weapons of stone, bone and wood from all parts of South America and the least-known islands of the Pacific; wax figures representing all strange peoples dressed in their different costumes, each in a glass case by itself, like Mrs. Partington's crocodile, "large as life and twice as natural"—surrounded by its own peculiar implements and belongings.

Miss Leale, of Guernsey, whose remarkable ride shooting was the feature of the recent meeting in England, is not yet twenty years of age, and handles her gun like a veteran.

Mrs. Logan does her literary work in General Logan's library, and his arm-chair is kept in just the same position in which he used it, and the room is filled with mementoes of him.

Young Mrs. Oscar Wilde is said to be a very striking contrast to her husband. She is very quiet, while he is rather loud; she is inclined to be commonplace, while he is brilliant in conversation.

Mrs. Paran Stevens has excited Newport, R. I., by changing the style of her livery and having her coachman and footman wear red top boots and black velvet collars, trimmed with red piping.

Sorosis, the woman's club of New York City, which has met regularly at Delmonico's for twenty-three years, will hereafter hold its meetings at Sherry's, as the club has outgrown Delmonico's parlors.

A Lewiston (Me.) lady has a needle in her sewing machine that she placed there in the fall of 1874, and has not once been removed. It has done all the family sewing since that date, and continues to do it, although worn rather thin.

Old Lady Aylesbury is one of the most extraordinary figures in London society. She is nearly eighty, and wears a wig of corkscrew curls. She is noted as the possessor of a sharp tongue, and her language is at all times picturesque and vigorous.

Women are rapidly making their way into the faculty of medicine in England. No fewer than 107 students attend the London School of Medicine for Women. Nine ladies who presented themselves for examination at the University of London all passed and took their M. B. degree.

Dr. Muriel Maitland King, physician to the ladies of society, treats her faded and feeble patients by training them how to sleep without the use of narcotics, in which society women as a rule indulge. The surest renovator of a bad complexion, according to this dermatologist, is plenty of natural restful sleep.

Coldest City in the World.

The coldest city in the world is Yakutsk, on the Lena River, in Siberia. The mean temperature of the town throughout the year is the same as that on the summit of Mont Blanc. There are many populous cities lying much nearer the North pole, but in none of them is the climate so bitter or the ground so continuously and so deeply frozen as in Yakutsk. And yet, notwithstanding, it has a resident population of 5000 souls, and it is a great trading city as well; thousands of merchants, hunters and mariners through its markets at specified seasons with the costliest furs and skins and all sorts of necessities of life for sale, and over a million of rubles change hands yearly.—Philadelphia Times.

The indications seem to be for a smaller hay crop than that of last year.

The World's Postage.

There was recently published by the French Ministry of Finance an interesting pamphlet in relation to the cost of the world's postage, which gives some very significant figures. The total cost of the postal service the world over is a little less than $500,000,000. Of all nations the United States is the most liberal patron of the postoffice, with an annual expenditure of $66,000,000.

Germany ranks second, spending $50,000,000; but this also includes the telegraph service, accounts not being available for the separation of the two services. Great Britain spends $49,000,000 for postal service, and France about $28,000,000. Thus it can be seen that the United States is far in the lead. Another feature of our service that renders it better than that of any other country is that the department does not wait for a demand to spring up, but that in all of the less settled sections of the country, the postoffice has preceded the population, and immigrants are never without postal facilities.

In this we differ widely from Europe, where only considerable villages have regular postoffices.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Curious Case of Color Blindness.

The London Lancet publishes a curious case of color blindness. The patient was an engine-driver in Russia, about forty years of age, whose vision was perfect until 1889. Then he began to suffer from violent headaches, due to over-exertion and insufficient sleep, which were followed by a loss of all power to distinguish colors. Everything appeared to him to be red, and he was obliged to throw up his position. Dr. M. Reich, who examined him, could discover no disease, but found his sight, focus, and sensation of light normal. In May, 1890, the man again submitted himself for examination, declaring that his sense of color had been restored. This proved to be the fact. The Lancet thinks that "this case seems to show that sensation of color is perfectly independent of physiological function."

There's danger in a cough—more than ever when your blood is "bad." It makes things easy for Consumption. But there's a cure for it in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. A positive cure—not only for Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Bronchitis, Asthma and all lingering Coughs, but for Consumption itself in all its earlier stages. It's reasonable. All these diseases depend on tainted blood. Consumption is simply Lung-Scrofula. And for every form of scrofula and blood-taint, the "Discovery" is a certain remedy. It's so certain, that its makers guarantee it to benefit or cure, in every case, or the money is refunded. With a medicine that is certain, this can be done.

There's a cure for Catarrh, too, no matter what you've been led to believe. If there isn't, in your case, you'll get $500 cash. It's a bonafide offer that's made by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. There's risk in it, to be sure, but they are willing to take the risk—you ought to be glad to take the medicine.
