MOCK HARE.

MOCK HARE. For a mock hare cut a nice, lean beef-steak from the sirloin, leaving out the tough end. Chop two tablespoonfuls of suet fine, with a cup of fine bread-crumbs. Add a little parsley and a sprig of thyme. Put in a teaspoonful of salt and half a teaspoonful of pepper. Wet the mixture together with the yolk and white of an egg, and finally add a tea-spoonful of onion juice for flavor. Spread this stuffing on the steak and roll it up in it, tying it in place to keep the stuffing in. Rub the steak with butter, flour it thickly, lay it on a roasting-rack and keep it in the oven is hot, it should be cooked brown on the outside in twenty or twenty-five minutes. When ready to serve remove the strings, and ready to serve remove the strings, and serve it in a platter with a brown gravy made from the drippings of the pan and accompanied by a crimson mould of spiced currants. Carve it in slices from the outside, not across the roll, serving a little dressing with each slice. This is a delicious way to cook a sirloin steak for a change.—New York Tribune.

DEEP APPLE PUDDING.

It may also be made with canned fruits, if some of the liquid is poured off and used for sauce. Line a buttered three-pint crockery bowl, with a rolling rim, with a paste made as follows: Sift a quart ot flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a small teaspoon-ful of finely-chopped suet, half mutton and half beef; stir into a soft of dough with a fork and about two cups of very cold water. Roll out once a little thin-ner than for biscuit crust and spread on the bottom and sides of the bowl; then put a layer of thinly-sluced tart apples, and sprinkle with about a teaspoonful of sugar and a little lemon or grated lemon peel, if liked, and so on until the bowl is heaping full; sprinkle two tablespoon-fuls of cold water through, then cover with paste. Wring the pudding cloth as dry as possible out of cold water, dredge it with flowr and put orge the top of the it with flour and put over the top of the pudding and tie with stout twine three times round under the rim of the bowl. The cloth should be square and of good size. Bring the ends together in the size. Bring the ends together in the middle, pulling that to tighten the string and secure with safety-pins or a few stitches. Put in a large pot of boiling water with an inverted plate or stand on the bottom and boil for three hours; the water should be replenished when preceded and kent boiling. When when needed and kept boiling. When cooked remove the cloth, run a knife around the sides of the bowl, hold a good-sized, rather deep dish over the top; invert quickly and you have a mound of light paste with plenty of well-cooked fruit. Half beef and half mutton makes a lighter paste than all beef. The former is better flavored, as it is not well to use all mutton.-New York World.
