There must be some ex-plainable reason for this unexpected depression in the steel rail business. What that reason is may be known to the manufacturers and purchas-ers of rails, but not to the public. That the depression has affected the steel rail mills throughout the coun-try is a sesured fact. Some nature, and to keep on discussing and urging it until public opinion be-comes so strong as not to allow any licensed saloon in our midst. Some nature, and operations have been resumed, and to keep on discussing and steel rail mills throughout the count try is an aesured fact. Some natur-ally attribute it to the belief that a special session of Congress will be called in March, that a revision of the tariff will follow, and that the duty on foreign steel rails will be so greatly reduced as to bring down the price of American rails, and that the railroad companies are delaying orders as long as they can in view of possible advantages to them. Other American industries are at-tributing unexpected depression in their business to this cause. The fact cannot be denied that the ex-pected change in our tariff system
