BLAINE'S END
WAS PEACEFUL.
SURROUNDED BY HIS FAMILY
THE GREAT STATESMAN
FADES QUIETLY AWAY
WITHOUT PAIN.

JAMES G. BLAINE.
 Born January 31, 1800.
 Died Friday January 27, 1893.
 Buried Friday January 30, 1893.

The hand of death has again laid itself upon one of the Republic's distinguished sons, and has added another name to the fearful mortuary roll of men and women in high station during the period of the present executive administration.

The nation only a few days since was shocked by the sudden and unexpected demise of the nineteenth President of the United States. Last week opened with the death of Associate Justice Lamar and closed with the culmination of the anticipated public bereavement in the death of James Gillespie Blaine; a Representative and Speaker of the House of Representatives and a Senator in the Congress of the United States; twice chief member of the Executive Cabinet; for over a quarter of a century the idol of the people for Presidential honors and once the Republican party's standard-bearer.

JAMES G. BLAINE was a native of Pennsylvania. He was a resident of Maine. And yet neither State can claim him as her own. He was a man not to be confined by the narrow limits of State boundaries. He was one of those Americans, of whom it can be said, he belonged to the United States. He was loved wherever the Stars and Stripes waved. He was honored in all sections. He was a true American, of Revolutionary stock, a lover of everything American. What greater eulogy could be paid him than this—he was BLAINE, not of Pennsylvania, not of Maine, but of America!

In the death of JAMES GILLESPIE BLAINE the greatest American Statesman passes away. He came into public life in a stormy period. He was an active participant in the building up of the reunited country. It has been a customary thing for some of his political opponents to ask, whenever his claims upon the Presidency have been published: "What has he done? What great measure has he ever produced? It would have been much nearer the mark to ask: What has he not done? What great measure has he not had a hand in? It is true that there is no distinctive piece of legislation, like the McKinley bill, the Mills bill, the Morrison bill, which is prefaced by his name, but even with the McKinley bill he had an intimate connection, for he it was who evolved the reciprocity idea and opened new markets. He it was who instigated the Pan American Congress and bound the South American countries to us with closer ties of friendship. It was a BLAINE Congress throughout. He it was, even, who shaped finally the important legislation which reconstructed the Southern States lately in rebellion and admitted them back to full partnership. From the day when he entered Congress until his resignation from the HARRISON Cabinet he never ceased to have an active interest in national affairs, or to participate in them in one way or another.

But BLAINE has gone from us. His political ambitions and questions of statecraft are forever laid aside. He had his praises and rewards, he had his criticisms. He fought vigorously he was a leader of leaders, and was never known to show the white feather. He made enemies, of course. No aggressive man is ever without them. They brought accusations, but he out-lived slander as other public men have done. It seems to be impossible for an American statesman to escape calumny, and BLAINE was no exception. But he silenced all enemies and lived to go to his grave at length honored as few men ever have been. His career now becomes history, and who shall write it? The history of JAMES G. BLAINE? Why, it is the history of the nation for the past thirty years.
