The following taken from the Fall Creek Herald, could be read with profit by many people and more especially by several young men who spend a great deal of their evenings around about the streets:

"Be careful how you speak of the character of the girl whom you don't know to be anything else but pure. It is the most vital spot in you would expect. You can buy proach it. You may rob her of her diamonds, her jewels or her personal property, but when you take from her character you take something which leaves her poorer than a begger. A man has the whole world before him upon which to depend, but when you take away the character of a girl you leave her with practically nothing.
