

The third point was that Mrs. Reagan, the matron at the police station had overheard Lizzie say to her sister Emma, "you have given me Willis Collins from Canton, and we away."

Every one of these points has been met by the defense. It was shown to follow soon. on the cross examination of one of the policemen who handled the hatchet found in the cellar that the han-Lizzie could not have burned it. What is more there was no trace of blood upon the blade that the chemists could find. As to the testimony of the officer that there were no tracks in the barn loft, it was proven by two witnesses that they had been in the loft them-selves the morning of the murder and before the crime was committed, so the no-tricks-in-the-dust story went to pieces. Furthermore a ped dler saw a woman coming from the barn at the very moment that Lizzie claimed to have come from there, and the fact that the peddler was in front last week. of the Borden house at the time and others. The peddler told the police of it at the time, but they supressed of it at the time, but they supressed the fact. Several witnesses swore positively that Mrs. Reagan had de-nied the story that she had overheard Lizzie say to her sister: "You have given me away." She was willing to sign a paper to that effect, but the Marshal of Fall River positively for-bade her doing so in the presence of a witness. As to the burned dress, Emma Borden swore that she re-membered it very well; that it was

Temma Borden swore that she re-membered it very well; that it was made by their regular dressmaker about three months before the mur-der, the two sisters helping; hat afterwards, while there was painting going on, the dress got badly smeared, and that she had asked ther sister to burn it several times; that on the Sunday after the murder Lizzie came into the kitchen with the dress upon her arm and said she believed she would burn it then that this was done with Emma's ap-proval, and that Miss Russell, who had peeled into the kitchen, saw it done; that Miss Russell was after-wards authorized to tell the police just what had happened. Further, more, the dress was covered with
