BY WM. MEYLERT. [CONTINUED FROM LAST WEEK.] In following up the account given Born, to Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Ward

by Le Forte of the efforts of the French to get into the good graces of the Shawanese which proved successful in not only making them their allies in the Allegheney country but also in getting a colony of them located farther north, evidently to aid them in keeping open a connection from Canada to the Allegheny river and having by this means gained a foot hold they next took measures to regain the exclusive trade of country. The Delawares who also had colonies on the head waters of the Ohio were driven by force of the French to stop trading with the English and following this came the arrest of English traders who were taken to Canada as prisoners, and although a treaty was entered into between England and France in 1748, yet there was no settlement of the boundaries of Pennsylvania and nothing perminent established. The Susquehanna country was a the time largely controlled by three Indian chiefs, Teedyuscung king of the Delawares, and Paxinos a distinguished chiefton of the Shawanese and Shekalamy the Vice Roy of the for the Sunday School Convention, Iroquos, stationed at Shemoken, now Subury. Teedyuscung whose head quarters was at Wyoming was born near Trenton in 1705 and when first mentioned was holding the position of chief of a colony of his nation that had reluctantly been made by the Iroquois to leave the lands near the Delaware and go to the Susquehanna. He was a man of great force in the councils of his nation and upon the death of Tadame was elected king. He is discribed as a lusty raw boned man inclined to be haughty in his manner and desirous of respect, his great failing being that of tondness for rum. He became the recognized leader of all the Indians upon the upper Susquehanna, consequently very obnoxious to the Iroquois. In his independant and letermined spirit he refused to subnit to their dictation. Having been brought up in close contact with the English and by native force had become a dreaded power in preventing the extension of their settlements. Prior to his day there had been several treaties by the terms of which the Indians claimed they had been deceived and the old contention was taken up by Teedyusing and although the home at Wyoming that they had been forced to accept proved one of great advantage in consolidating the nation as it brought them near the other tribes of the Delawares that had previously settled on both sides of the Alleghenys and nearer their hunting ground on the Juniata. It in no way removed the feeling of resentment towards the English or their allies-the Iroquois

Of Paxinos we have been unable o learn but little and that to the effect that he was the embodyment of treachery and deceit characteristic of the Shawanese nation. The name of Shekalamy is first found in 727 as the representative of the Iroquois at Shamoken, his name occurring in all important treaties from that time until his death in 1747 after which the provincial govern-

1895 connection with Braddocks army the news of the spread of hostile Indians all along their border settlements broke up like a thunderbolt. The unprotected homes of the settlers of Northampton and Lancaster counties were the first to be destroyed, their homes were burned, grain destroyed and families either killed or carried away captives. Added to this came the report that 1500 French soldiers with Indian allies gathered from every direction were coming from the Ohio upon them. Pennsylvania of all the colonies was the most defenceless it having been the uniform policy of the Quakers who in the ascendency in the collonial council to confine the government appropriations to the carrying on of peaceful measures. The action how ever of the Surrounding colonies and the very active measures taken by the citizens of Philadelphia.

Benjamin Franklin being their leader, resulted in moving them to activity. The first blow struck upon the Susquehanna was near Sha mokin about the 20th of October where 14 white persons were killed From that date for about three months, murder and outrages were almost constant. The only white persons who traveled the Susquehan na country with any degree of safety were the Moravean missionaries and they were recalled from their labors by their bretheren at Bethlehem before the close of the 1755.
