1861-1895,

From the Louisville Courier, Kv.

For the second time the Grand Army of the Republic crosses Mason and Dixon's line, but the circumstances are very different from what they were thirty-four years ago. A generation has intervened, and the lapse of a third of a century brings wonderful changes. It is the reverse of the situation described by the Scottish poet: "Thrice have I sought Clan Alpine's glen In peace; but when I come again, I come with banner, brand and bow As leader seeks his mortal foe."

The year 1861 was one that must be ever memorable in American annals. Its beginning found the American people in a peculiar condition of unrest, hopeful of peace, apprehensive of war. Each month brought new complications until the firing upon Sumter resolved all doubts as to whether peace was to be preserved.

North of Mason and Dixon's line the effect of this event was electrical. Of what occurred in the South it is not our present purpose to speak. that not being relevant to the matter before us. It is not too much to say, however, that the outburst of feeling surprised everybody in both play while it lasted, but it was sections. No one that was old enough at that time to note the current of events can ever forget it There has been nothing comparable to it within the receollection of any one now living. The indignation, the fervor, the intense activity, the rapidity with which a nation of farmers, merchants shopkeepers and pro fessional men transformed itself into an armed camp were bewildering. The exaltation of feeling among the people was unprecedented. The great centers of population naturally felt the impulse first, and regiments were formed as if by magic. But the rural districts were not far behind. The news ran through them faster than the fiery cross ever traveled through the Highlands. The farmer left the plow in the furrow, and hastened to the nearest recruiting. The mills and shops were in every quarter. The scenes that followed this were such as are common to all wars girded her first born for the fray, spite of her high purpose. time the lot of those left behind was opening statement. harder than that of those who went high hopes of distinction:

"Glory before and love behind Marshaled proud chivalry."

It is needless to say that most of very inadequate ideas of what was before them. Many thought it was but a holiday trip, and that the trouble would be over in a mouth or two. And a few fancied it would be over before they got there. Some peril on the edge of battle they were the dreary waiting in camp, the struggle for life in the hospital, the fatigues of the rapid march, the interminable pining in military prisons, the cold, the damp, the heat, the miasma, occasional hunger in the trenches, the thousand and one major and minor miseries of military life were unknown to most of those who left the plow, the shop and the loom to transform themselves into soldiers. More than that, they were not prepared for the sharp sting of defeat, the terror of flight, the heart.

sickness of hope deferred. Many illusions were dispelled before it was given to any of them to return to

It is quite true that these mistakes vere made on both sides. The two sections had lived so far apart that they did not know each other in any tolerable degree. They were destined to get acquainted under circumstance that would leave no doubts to be resolved in the future. If the South had paraphrased the words of Laly Macketh-

"The raven himself is hoarse
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan under my battlement"—

it would have expressed not only what many of her people felt, but actually what took place in the early years of the war. But the Southern men also early realized that they had underrated the magnitude of the struggle before them.

It is necessary to recall these events in order to heighten the contrast with this second coming. The Grand Army again enters the gateway of the South, but under far different circumstances. There are here no bloody hands to welcome foes to hospitable graves, as of yore. On the contrary, we welcome them as friends and brothers, compatriots and Americans, whose laurels are the common heritage, whose imperish able renown makes luminous the pages of our common history. Our hearts and homes are open to them; our citizens are anxious to do then honor. They will not remain with us so long as they did before, but they will have a good deal more fun, at least, if they do not, it shall not be our fault.

Such a spectacle as we shall have in Louisville this week would, perhaps, be impossible in any other country, In the United States we are good fighters, but we are not long haters. We fight out our differences, and dismiss them. We are too busy, and, let us hope, too sensible and too patriotic, to keep alive the animosities of a day that has gone forever and ever by. The "late unpleasantness" was no child's faught out to its logical result, and all classes are prepared to accept it, and to discard the passions which it excited. We have built up the waste places, have buried the past, and turn our faces resolutely to the future, with confidence in the great lestiny which our united efforts will create. When we look back to 186! we can not but wonder at the mysterious way along which a beneficen Providence has led a great people through the havoc of war and fratricidal strife to peace, prosperity and fraternity.

The Durant Trial.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 16.—The Durrant trial entered upon its ninth week this morning. A slight change in the program for to-day was made necessary by a death in the family of Mrs. George P. Dorgan, whose exemptied of their employes. State amination was not finished when court adjourned last Thursday vied with State and city with city in arming for the fray. The "dread-Durrant's defenders will be unable ful note of preparation" was heard to persuade Mrs. Elizabeth Crossett to modify her testimony regarding her ride in a Valencia street car on sudden transition from peace to war the afternoon of April 3. ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

The weather is serene again. Our landlords haven't been extremely busy this week. The Republican county candidates are growing in popularity. Those who desire to be on the big side, this fall, will vote the Republican ticket.

A brother farmer should have the support of his neighbor farmer at the polls. Judge Peck of Towanda, will preside at our special term of court. October 21.

Hughesville fair next week. The nanagers of this society have given much of their attention to horse racing and those of our people who visit the exposition and are interested in this sport will not be disappointed.

A number of the attornies interested in the Judicial Contest court predict that Judge Dunham's maority will be in the neighborhood of 300 at the close of said proceedings. This will be good news to the majority of our Sullivan county people.

It is characteristic of people to dmire the man who will vote for the candidate best qualified for the office to which he aspires. There is logic in these few lines and we ask our Sullivan county voters to give it thought before casting their ballots in November.

J. S. Perkins one of the firm of the Horseheads Bridge Co., was in town Wednesday. Mr. Perkins contemplates receiving, of our County Commissioners, the order of erecting in iron bridge across Loyal Sock at Ringdale. The Horseheads Bridge Company have erected several bridges in Sullivan county, and each structure has given entire satisfaction. Our Commissioners appreciate value for the county money, and there is but little doubt but that Mr.
