HONORED BY DEWEY.
 When the Tenth Pennsylvania troops came into sight, says a special dispatch from New York, Governor Stone was riding at their head, carrying his hat in his hand, because he was so constantly cheered that it wasn't worth his while to try to put it on. He was accompanied by his staff, and after him rode Brigadier General Schall, in command of the troops. The Second, Ninth, First and Third regiments followed, looking more like regulars than militia, a peculiarity of the soldiers of Pennsylvania. At the end came the veteran Tenth, with Lieutenant Colonel James E. Barnett in command. The men were in khaki trousers, blue flannel shirts and slouch hats that looked as if they had seen really more service than any hat ought to be called upon to endure. They came in the same attire that they wore when they marched aboard the transports at Manila and cheered for the country to which they were going after their hard service. They looked veterans and carried themselves like veterans, every man of them. When they first came up, marching with a free, swinging step, all the stands rose to them and stood silent for a few seconds, taking them all in. Above them floated the flag that they had carried into battle and out again, tattered, frayed, a complicated mesh-work of fluttering bits, and the proudest possession that a regiment can have. When the admiral caught sight of the flag he took off his hat and held it down to his side, and he looked at those worn colors as a man looks at that which he loves, and stood so, uncovered and with his face turned toward them until they had passed under the arch. It was the most impressive sight of an impressive day, for it took the mind away for a moment from the glory of the pageant to the stern work of war. There was paid to the flag a deeper tribute than mere wild cheering.
 The boys returned to their homes in western Pennsylvania delighted with the success of their trip.
 An amusing feature of the political campaign in Pennsylvania is an effort made by Democratic politicians and their allies to create the impression that the visit of the "Fighting Tenth" to New York was worked up to aid Colonel Barnett in his canvass for state treasurer. Inasmuch as Colonel Barnett's election by an immense majority is already assured, the ridiculous character of this story must be apparent. The expenses for the trip of the Tenth were met by subscriptions from friends of the regiment who did not propose to have the boys kept at home for the mere matter of their transportation. Their entertainment in Philadelphia was provided by the Third regiment and $1,500 was appropriated by the Philadelphia city council. If the enthusiasm over the Tenth drew attention to the candidacy of Colonel Barnett the cause of patriotism and good government is not likely to suffer thereby.

AS TO STATE ISSUES.
 Scandal Mongers Make No Impression With Reckless and False Statements.
 "Bryan's servile follower, W. T. Creasy, the Democratic candidate for state treasurer," says the Wilkesbarre Times, "is anxious to make the campaign on what he pleases to term 'state issues' and then he proceeds to create them by his fertile imagination and reckless tongue. Creasy and his insurgent friends are positively reckless in their declarations that the people have been robbed of millions upon millions under machine misrule in the state treasury." This is simply absurd, and no one knows it better than those who utter a tale so false. Not a one red cent has been stolen. Not a dollar is missing. The books are straight, and no direct charge has ever been made or a single item pointed out as being wrong. We ask, therefore, wherein is there a state issue for the treasurership?
 "These scandal mongers know that old methods no longer exist, and so if the objection is to old methods the ground is cut from under their feet. The Republican legislature, it will be remembered, inaugurated a perfect reform in the method of banking money. All moneys must be deposited and upon these deposits interest is paid, all of which goes into the state treasury. What issue is there over that? It is a mere question of electing an honest man, and we have yet to hear any one questioning the probity of the present incumbent of bearing the character of Lieutenant Colonel Barnett. To our mind the real question for the voters to decide is whether the great Republican state of Pennsylvania shall be turned over to the Democrats on the eve of a presidential election. Whether the anarchistic and destructive views of Bryan as represented by Creasy shall prevail in preference to the sound financial policy of McKinley as presented by Barnett. We think we can forecast the result in this the Keystone state of the Union."

 New York's Honors to Dewey the Crowning Event in American History.

THE FESTIVITIES CLOSE
 The Great Three Days' Reception Carried Out With Few Mishaps and no Fatalities

The Admiral Affected to Tears—His Voice Trembles When Speaking of the Honor Done Him—Major-General Miles and Other Men of Prominence Talk About It.

New York, Oct. 3.—Greater New York, after having spent almost a full week of time, bubbled over with enthusiasm and spent money enough to establish a hundred national banks, in her welcome to Admiral Dewey, congratulates herself that she has successfully carried out the crowning event of the nineteenth century, and that she has bestowed upon a worthy hero the grandest reception ever tendered an individual in the history of the world.
 Those who were officially responsible for the success of the celebration, feel particularly elated over the fact that during all of the festivities which were witnessed by at least 2,000,000 visitors, there were no accidents of a startling nature, and not a single life was lost to mar the pleasure of the occasion. Nearly all of the visitors have returned to their homes and the city has again taken on its everyday appearance of a bustling centre of business activity. The work of removing the decorations, tearing down stands, etc., has commenced, and within forty-eight hours New York will look practically the same as she always does when not dressed up in holiday attire. Admiral Dewey, whose courage and bravery were so manfully demonstrated in the "little unpleasantness" between the Spanish and American fleets in Manila Bay, has also demonstrated the fact that he is a tender hearted man as well. The attention shown him and the kind and patriotic words showered upon him by city and state officials, reception committees, school children, and the visiting multitudes in all walks of life, affected him to tears on more than one occasion, and while he says that he was glad when it was over, he cannot talk of the great display of friendship and hospitality without his voice trembling with emotion.
 Before taking the train for Washington where another reception awaits him, the Admiral said he had not been fully informed as to what he would have to submit to over at the National Capital, but if he was to be treated no worse than New York treated him, he thought he might be able to undergo a couple of more days of it, after which he would go to the home of his brother in Vermont and take a short rest.
Saturday Evening's Banquet.
 The men behind the guns of the Olympia had their particular innings in the celebration in the evening at the Waldorf-Astoria, and though they were rather leg-weary after marching in the long parade the smoker, buffet-lunch and vaudeville performance arranged for their enjoyment was doubly attractive.
 There were 450 jackies at the smoker; 250 from the Olympia, 25 each from the ships in Sampson's squadron—the New York, Brooklyn, Texas, Massachusetts and Indiana—and 75 from all the other naval vessels in the parade.
 The smoker was begun at 8 o'clock, and the lunch, which was really something more, was served the first thing. All kinds of sandwiches, lobster, chicken, potato and herring salads, many special confections, contrived by the chef, Nesselrode pudding, Neapolitan cream, fancy cakes, coffee and nuts, were served, also whiskey and beer to drink and cigars and pipes to smoke. There was no limit to anything.
 While the sailor boys were enjoying their fun amid the splendors of the brilliant ballroom the vaudeville was going on under the direction of Oscar Hammerstein.
 Anna Held, Marshall P. Wilder, James J. Corbett and his sparring partner, Joe Kennedy, Louise Baudet, the Hawthornes, Marie Dressler, Extra Kendall, Falletti's monkeys and a host of special artists furnished an admirable show.
 The boxes were filled with army and navy officers, their families and other guests of the city.
 Randolph Guggenheimer made a short speech of welcome to the jackies, tendering them the freedom of the city.
Miles Praises the Reception.
 In an interview after the reception was brought to a close, Major-General Nelson A. Miles said:
 "It was the grandest thing I have ever seen. Certainly it surpassed anything in the way of a reception to a man of the people in the history of this country. It was magnificent, and New York has more than reason to feel proud.
 "I attended the Queen's Jubilee in London, and have no hesitancy in saying that as a spectacle our parade was far superior. There may have been more spectators in London—on that point I cannot speak authoritatively—but in point of impressiveness and enthusiasm the occasion could not stand comparison with ours.
 "What impressed me most in making a comparison between the two occasions was the difference between the arrangements for handling the crowds and the crowds themselves. The London crowd might more properly be called a mob. The police arrangements were entirely inadequate.
