message from Nordmont one day last week stating that a man answering to the description of Meyers, a fugitive murderer on whom a large reward is offered for his capture, was riding on the freight train northward bound. Mr. Gansel at once procured firearms and hurried to the station prepared to execute his official duties, however dangerous they might be. By the time the train had reached Laporte there was a good sized gathering of men and boys armed with rocks and clubs ready to give assistance if any was needed. All were considerably excited but none more so than the hobo himself when confronted with such a formidable array of captors.
He yielded willingly to the officer's commands, and when questioned stated that he was looking for work and would gladly stop off here if such could be secured. A close examination proved that he did not answer to Meyer's description and he was left to go his way.
