Laporte was aroused to great activity Wednesday evening by a fire alarm given which was said to be Prof. Ford's cottage. It fortunately proved to be a false alarm. Mr. Ford had made a bonfire with the brush he had gathered about his premises and some one taking notice of the bright, glaring flames in the vicinity of Mokoma Place started the alarm. Within a brief time the whole population was swarming in upon the surprised Professor with pails of water to extinguish the fire. He objected however, and placed the following item for publication.

"Prof. Ford begs the pardon of the good people of Laporte for startling them with his bonfire last night. Next year he will announce the time and invite such as desire to see it to come out."

The Williamsport Evening News believes that "when once the farmers throughout the country come to appreciate the benefit of good roads in raising the value of their properties and lessening the wear and tear on their horses and wagons, to say nothing of giving them an easy outlet to market at all seasons of the year, there will be a much livelier scramble for slices of that State appropriation than at present.

Americans are used to big figures. They are so familiar with the superiority of our industrial situation that they do not often take pains to remember what it means.

It means, first of all, that this nation makes a closer approach to outright industrial independence than was ever made by any other nation since human society was organized. We could shut our doors and live in perfect comfort, feeding ourselves, clothing ourselves and supplying nearly all our other needs from our own resources.

It means, in the second place, that the possibilities of wealth from the prosecution of successful industry are far greater here than elsewhere and that all the nations of the earth must flock to us for food and fiber and pay tribute to us.
