From the lumber mills comes the reports that lumber has not been so scarce an article in years as it is now, and the indications are that the demand for all grades of first-class lumber will be stronger during most of the months this year than it has been for a long time. There is in fact an abnormal demand for it.

The entertainment Tuesday evening by L. D. Walden, Magician, of New York City, for the benefit of the new school house was well attended and was voted a first-class entertainment. The children especially, seemed to get more than their "money's worth" in watching the magician do all sorts of "impossible" things. Some of our small boys helped to furnish a liberal share of the amusement.

An exchange says: Now that cold weather is edging on we would call our rural readers attention to the fact they can win a big spot in their carrier's heart by stamping their mail and not make him fish pennies out of the bottom of the mail box. If you must put in pennies just get a small baking powder can and drop them in that, as he can easily dump the can and secure the pennies. Be thoughtful. The carrier will appreciate it.

Agriculture in Public Schools.
The grange everywhere is in favor of nature study in the common schools. It is, however, noteworthy that there is a lack of unanimity in opinion as to how best accomplish this much desired end. A helpful suggestion comes from the New York state educational department along this line. A syllabus on agriculture for use in elementary grades of the public schools has been issued and no doubt will be furnished to any one desiring to investigate the subject.

One obstacle to the introduction of the study of agriculture in the common schools is the unpreparedness of the teacher for the work. Asked if she can teach it even in its most elementary branches, she throws up her hands in despair. But the New York state educational department approaches her from another side of the subject and asks her to tell her pupils about plant growth and something about fruits and vegetables and the commonest methods of their culture. She thus gives her pupils something to think about and write about, and what they write is made a part of their English work. They are studying agriculture and the teacher is teaching it—of course in its most elementary forms—and yet it is being done as well in English quite as much as work in agriculture.

The Farmers' Union.
There is an organization known as the Farmers' union which is spreading very rapidly throughout the central southwest. However, this organization is more political in character than is the grange, though possibly, if the political feature could be subordinated so as not to conflict with the principles laid down in the grange declaration of purposes, a union might be effected between it and the grange. There does not seem to be any good reason for rival farm organizations, in view of the fact that the grange is attempting to secure those benefits for the farming industry which should characterize the aims and purposes of any farmers' organization, but if the union could be effected it would materially strengthen the grange in those states where now it is not very strong.

STATE LECTURER'S DUTIES.

Chiefly For Improvement of Lecture Work in Subordinate Granges. [Special Correspondence.]
I believe the duty of the state grange lecturer should be chiefly for the improvement of the lecture work in subordinate granges—planning that work in a measure, suggesting methods, regularly furnishing topics for discourse, preparing special day programmes, etc., and in a general way assisting the subordinate lecturers in making their work as effective as possible. Many personal letters should be written where a weak lecturer is located, and at all times let the lecturers feel that the state lecturer is their servant in time of need.

Secondarily comes the field work through picnic addresses, Pomona grange talks, lecturers' conferences and occasionally a visit to a subordinate grange when it is in everyday working order. This field work gives the much needed personal touch to the lecture work, although we hold that of the two the printed page and personal letter can best do our duty. The work of organizing granges should not be expected of a state lecturer unless it be where comparatively few granges exist and the combined force of grange officials in the state is needed to extend the organization. The state lecturer should never lose sight of the fact that the greatest progress our Order can make must come through the subordinate grange, where the rank and file of members are to be helped.

MRS. F. D. SAUNDERS,
Lecturer Michigan State Grange.
A QUESTION OF PATRIOTISM.
Some of our Democratic friends are putting up a howl because congress has ordered canal supplies to be bought in this country. Why not? The question of tariff has nothing to do with the case. It is purely a question of patriotism, of helping out your own family. Exactly the same thing applies to communities. The man who deserts his home merchants to patronize those of another borough merely because he can save a penny or two shows a poor specimen of public spirit. We are glad that at least every Republican from New England went on record as favoring such purchases. Keep the money at home, where the taxes are assessed and paid.—Waltham Press-Tribune.

Our Busy National Secretary.
National Secretary Freeman has been unusually busy for the last two months in getting out certificates for the sixth degree. He has written over 3,200 sixth degree certificates this year and has issued 130 or more charters for new granges and reorganized granges for the first quarter of 1906. There seems to be a general advance all along the line in the grange movement.
