The youngest lawyer that ever appeared before the Supreme Court of the United States the other day argued in favor of the constitutionality of the North Carolina statute prohibiting the running of "bucket shops" in that State. He was Walter Clark, Jr. son of Chief Justice Clark, of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, and he has just passed his twenty-first birthday.

The present session of Congress will be a lively one. As it is the hort session, and several of the members will not return for the next, they are anxious to push through bills in which they are interested. Among the subjects to be considered are the project of deepening the Delaware river channel, the ship subsidy bill, campaign fund publicity, to make Porto Ricans United States citizens, the establishment of a number of forest reserves, swamp reclamation, an amendment of the eight hour law and a number of other important measures.

A sensation has been caused at Centralia, Columbia county, by the news from Philadelphia of the arrest of Mrs. Bridget Carey, charged with poisoning her husband, two children, and two other people at that place. Mrs. Carey is well known at Centralia where the family lived up to six months ago when her husband died.

It is thought she may have poisoned him. She is the daughter of the late Michael Gerrity of Conyngham, and she has several sisters and other relatives living around Conyngham.

One of the papers read in the recent national tuberculosis congress pointed out as one fruitful cause of the spread of the disease, the poor ventilation in many of the churches. This may account for the small attendance at some of them. The non-attendants will probably explain that they stay away for the good of their health.
