The foreman plumber's disgust at the flooding of England with cheap German made goods will be better understood when the variety of manufactured German articles sold in London, almost to the utter exclusion of English made goods of the same grades, is known.

Go where you will in the cheaper shops patronized principally by the working people and you will find the three words "Made in Germany" on practically every article offered for sale in these lines: Rugs, china, ironstone ware, dolls, toys, hardware, cutlery, tools, metal goods of every conceivable sort, cheap jewelry, men's and women's hats, umbrellas, walking sticks, carpets, hosiery and all manner of knit goods, cheap curios, picture frames, colored pictures, and so on.

"Just wait till English workmen generally get the hang of things as they really are," said the plumber, "and then give them a chance to vote for members of parliament. You'll see a majority in favor of Mr. Chamberlain's tariff plans at Westminster then." DEXTER MARSHALL.

AS DUMPING GROUND GREAT BRITAIN IS CONVENIENT FOR GERMAN EXPORTERS. The British Market is Supplied With Vast Quantities of Goods Made in Germany, and Millions of British Workmen Walk the Streets.

London, Oct. 25.—He was a foreman plumber, English through and through, but quite as intelligent as a man of like occupation in the United States.

He was discussing Joseph Chamberlain's tariff schemes with some of his friends, including the writer.

At the beginning of his talk he announced that, although he had formerly believed in free trade, he was now heart and soul in favor of a protective tariff for England. He justified his present political attitude in this way:

"I hear a lot about all sorts of things costing more in the United States than in England, because of the American tariff," he said. "One thing I know, and that is that men are worth more in the United States than in England. It is admitted even by those who want to see England continue its free trade policy that wages are much higher in the United States than here, and the government reports, which are being got out constantly, tell us just how much higher.

"But it is said it costs so much more to live in America than in England that the American is really worse off than the English workman. You can buy so much more for your money in England, they say, that 2 sovereigns—$10—will carry the English workman farther than $20 will the American.

"It may be so, but I doubt it. Yet it is perfectly amazing what two and six—that's about 60 cents in American money, isn't it?—will buy off the counters of some of the English shops. You can't help but wonder how it is done when you notice how many articles that you need can be had for that price. Perhaps you suspect there is something the matter with them and examine them carefully to find out. They seem all right. You feel glad you live in a country where such a little bit of money will buy so much, and you decide to take the things—that is, if you have the 'two and six' in your pocket. If you are out of employment and your pocket is empty it doesn't matter whether the price is 2s. 6d. or £2 6s. You can't buy them at either figure.

"When you get home with what you have bought you notice that every one of the things is somewhere marked, 'Made in Germany.' You don't let that worry you. You knew that before you bought them.

"But you keep thinking about it, and by and by you realize that those three words tell a pretty big story. If you know a thing or two they explain why your two and six has gone so far in buying what you wanted.

"Made in Germany," where the wages are almost as much lower than English wages as the English are lower than American wages. 'Made in Germany,' to send to England in exchange for English money, which will be used to pay, not English, but German wages. 'Made in Germany,' to keep the German workman busy and well fed while thousands of English workmen who might be making the things you have bought are walking the streets in idleness, going without wages at all and wondering how they are going to support their families next winter.

"Let England once lay a good, solid duty on the things that are brought in from Germany and sold here in such wonderful cheap 'two and six' lots and see what the result would be. Thousands of the capable workmen now idle in London would be put to work making these things. The money they cost would be used to pay wages to Englishmen, not Germans, and the Englishmen would spend it here, not in Germany."

The foreman plumber's disgust at the flooding of England with cheap German made goods will be better understood when the variety of manufactured German articles sold in London, almost to the utter exclusion of English made goods of the same grades, is known.

Go where you will in the cheaper shops patronized principally by the working people and you will find the three words "Made in Germany" on practically every article offered for sale in these lines: Rugs, china, ironstone ware, dolls, toys, hardware, cutlery, tools, metal goods of every conceivable sort, cheap jewelry, men's and women's hats, umbrellas, walking sticks, carpets, hosiery and all manner of knit goods, cheap curios, picture frames, colored pictures, and so on.

"Just wait till English workmen generally get the hang of things as they really are," said the plumber, "and then give them a chance to vote for members of parliament. You'll see a majority in favor of Mr. Chamberlain's tariff plans at Westminster then." DEXTER MARSHALL.

WOULD HURT WORKERS. To Stop Custom of Selling Surplus Goods Abroad. Democrats are attempting to force the tariff as an issue to the front, and the gage is promptly taken up. Admitting that the country is more prosperous than ever, that more people are employed and at higher wages than ever before, while the cost of living is proportionately less, the Democrats now take up the plea that the manufacturers are making too much money and that they must be skinned. The only argument offered is that manufacturers sometimes sell goods abroad for less than home prices.

The fact is undoubted. Let us admit that at the start, but as the amount of foreign sales compared with those at home is but a minute percentage, too much must not be argued from the fact. If this is the only nation in the world that has such a practice it might seem reprehensible. In fact, as Secretary Shaw shows, nearly every nation in the world does the same and particularly free trade England. It is a double edged sword that the Democrats use, for if our practice means that we must adopt free trade it is equally as logical that Great Britain should adopt protection.

Every nation does this, for the very simple reason that the manufacturer likes to keep his mills going all the time if he can. He does not want to lay off his hands. He wants to keep in business. If he has a surplus beyond the home demand he will sell it abroad for what he can get if there is the barest margin of profit and even when there is none at all. To stop this custom would hurt the workingmen more than any one else. The foreign trade in manufactured goods is to a large extent a remnant sale, such as every bargain counter affords. -Philadelphia Inquirer.

Short Talks on Advertising By Charles Austin Bates. No. 19.

People generally read advertisements more than they did a few years ago. The reason is to be found in the advertisements themselves. Advertisers are more careful than they used to be. They make the advertisements more readable. Some of them even become, in a way, a department of the paper, and people look for them every day with as much zest and pleasure as they turn to any other feature.

This is true of many department stores all over the country. In many cities there is just one man who appreciates the value of such interest. He breaks away from the old set style. He tells something interesting in his space every day.

There are lots of interesting things in business. Look over the miscellany page of any paper—look at its local news columns, and its telegraph news, for that matter, and you'll see that the majority of the items are more or less closely related to some business fact.

Dress these facts up in a becoming garb of words, and they will find readers, even though they be in a "mere advertisement." Let the merchant come down off his pedestal. He needn't be flippant—far from it, but let him not write as if he were addressing somebody afar off, and telling him about something at even a greater distance.

The newspaper goes right into its reader's house—goes in and sits down with him. It is on the table when he eats, and in his hands while he is smoking after the meal. It reaches him when he is in an approachable condition.

That's the time to tell him about your business—clearly, plainly, convincingly—as one man talks to another.
