POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as candidate tor the nomination for the office of Sher. iff of Sullivan County, subject to the Republican rules. W. H. BIDDLE,

Feb. 24, 1911.	Elkland Township

Our business was active during Court week. This is gratifying for more than one reason. First because business means money. Second, because it means that our effort to make the News Item a better paper is meeting with success, and that the people of Sullivan County appreciate the fact that we are doing good work both in the News Item and in our commercial printing department. We are not in the habit of tooting our own horn to a great extent, but we have received many complimentary expressions of our patrons' appreciation of our endeavor and feel it our duty to thank them for the same. However in the past year we have been "on the job", we have made but little progress tohave made but little progress to-ward the end we wish to gain, but by constantly pounding away, and by the hearty cooperation of the now, or you'll be late for school." by the hearty cooperation of the patrons generally, we expect to make still better showing in the ensuing year. The best way to help from the outside is to send in every bit of interesting news you hear. We will attend to the inside of the plant but it is impossible for us to see into every home in the county and note the happenings. Items may be sent in by telephone or mail, and we will surely appreciate them.

The Intercepted Letter

With a tired sigh Barbara lay down her pen and walked to the win-The early morning sunlight dow. shone upon a face that was pale and distrait, with eyes heavy-lidded from lack of sleep. For a moment she pressed her forehead against the win-dow-pane, grateful for the coolness it afforded. Then nervously she re-traced her steps to the desk and pick-ed up the letter she had written. It was short and formal, its formality for the animal. They had been at was short and formal, its formatity accentuated by the straight, prim lines of the handwriting. "Dear Mr. Lehan—After grave re-flection I have concluded that it will be better for us beh if your forget that be better for us both if you forget that last night I consented to become your wife. I have no explanation to offer. If you choose you may simply look upon this conclusion as one of my vagaries. As you know, I do not love you, and despite your conviction to the contrary we would not be happy together with the conditions as they I am sure of this. You will not are. call here again, of course. Believe me regretfully yours, "BARBARA DENNIS."

With trembling fingers she ad-dressed and sealed it. She hated herself for her vacillation, for her cow-ardice, for her selfishness toward the mother and sister for whose sake she had promised to marry Frank Lehan. "But, oh!" she half groaned, "I never could do it! It would mean a life's misery for the two of us, just as much for him as for me, since I could not bring myself to return his affection. I'm sure mother would rather remain poor than enjoy wealth at the expense of my unhappiness." She started to leave the room, her intention being to drop it into a letter box at the corner of the street. At the door she paused, hastily wiping the tears from her eyes, for she heard light footsteps in the hallway. In another moment a young girl rushed into the room, her face aglow, in her eyes the light of a great joy.

she exclaimed, "Oh. Babbie!" breathlessly. "Mother's told me! Isn't it glorious? To think that we're going to be rich at last. Or—that is— you'll be rich—and I suppose—" She smiled roguishly, so taken up with her own happiness that she failed to notice Barbara's unresponsiveness. 'Come over here and sit in this chair near the window, Bab. There's something I'm bursting to tell you, something I've never mentioned to you or mother before, because I knew it would"—she hesitated—"hurt you both."

Barbara submitted passively as her sister led her to a big chair, into which she pushed her so unceremoniously that the sad face lighted up for "Now," began the younger girl, seating herself on the floor at Barbara's feet. "Since you and Frank will have lots and lots of money to spare. I'm going to beg for some of it. Of course," she added hastily, "I'm going to pay you back some day." There was now no gayety in the eyes raised to Barbara's—instead, they were very grave. "Bab," she went on, slowly, "ever since I entered high slowly, "ever since I entered high school, three years ago, my greatest wish has been to go to college." Bar-bara started slightly, but her sister did not notice. "I've lain a te did not notice. night after night, trying to think of some way to do it, but there didn't seem to be any. I knew if I told moth-er how much I wished to go, she would manage somehow to send me, but I couldn't tell her, knowing how hard it is for her to get along. But now, it's different." She suddenly laughed aloud, and spread out her fin-gers ecstatically. "Oh, how different! And you, dear old precious, have made my dream come true. Besides you will be married, so that we'll both be happy!"

Barbara gazed tenderly at the pretty face pressed against her knee, its ty face pressed against her knee, its smoothness unbroken by any line de-noting that sorrow had ever entered its owner's life. Was she the one to plant the first furrow there? Shivering slightly, she reached out her hand

Several persons wished to reach points on the Lehigh Valley and through the courtesy of the management the W. & N. B. train was sent through to Towanda.

Expect Locusts In Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania State Zoologist Sur-face stated in Harrisburg that from reports he had received he looked for an invasion of the seventeen-year-old locust of York, Lancaster, Dauphin, Chester, Montgomery, Bucks, Lebanon, Berks and Lehigh counties this year. The locusts appeared in this district seventeen years ago and were also noticed in 1902 and 1905, but not in any great number.

The zoologist urges that persons intending to plant trees in land which was swept over by locusts on their last invasion should not do so until June, and that trees on tracts simi-larly visited should not be pruned until summer.

When people realize that it is not the quantity for the money, so much as the quality that counts, then they will patronize the store which does business in good pure goods. Cut prices often mean cut qualities. Our prices are as low as good goods wil allow. Our goods are not of the cheap mail-order variety. When comparing prices do not forget to compare qualities. If you find the prices lower than ours, then you will find the qualities inferior-generally "bargain house" job lots.

Red Sea Petroleum.

A year ago the announcement was made of the discovery of petroleum on the shore of the Red Sea. Since then a well has been sunk to a depth of 1,400 feet, the estimated daily yield of which is 300 barrels. The petroliferous strata are found at Jemseh, on the African shore of the sea, about 150 miles south of Suez.

Chinese Insults.

The Chinese are curious folk. An educated Chinaman will take delight in using in conversation with a Western barbarian the adjective which is used only to qualify animals, though only his interpreter will discover the insult of which the person for whom it is intended remains supremely ignorant.

A China "boy" will enter your presunderstand the insult intended.
