STANDARD OUSTED FROM TENNESSEE

United States Supreme Court Upholds the State Anti-Trust Law

THE LUMBER TRUST DISBANDED

Fight Started In Year 1907-Every Contention Made by the Oil Company is Decided Against It-Justice Lurton Announced Opinion.

Washington, D. C., May 10 .- The hands of the states in their fight against combinations were upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States with telling effect.

The Association of Retail Lumber
Dealers in Mississippi and Louisiana was disbanded by affirmance of the decree of the Supreme Court of Missis-sippi; the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky was ousted from Tennessee by the approval of the decree of the Supreme Court of Tennessee. the state courts had held, had violated the anti-trust acts of the respective Justice Lurton announced the opin-ion of the court in the Mississippi It was his first utterance from the Supreme Court bench on the com-bination question. He said the members of the association had obligated themselves not to deal with any manufacturer or wholesaler in lumber who sold to consumers in the localities in which they conducted a business sufficiently large to meet the demands of the public. He accepted the findings of the state courts, and considered only whether the statute was in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment by abridging the freedom of contract

The proceedings in the Standard Oil were begun in 1907 under the Tennessee anti-trust act.

The Standard and two of its agents were indicted under the state anti-trust act. One of the agents was convicted, but the Standard escaped pun-ishment on the ground that it could not be fined under the act, but could be ousted. Ouster proceedings were then begun against it. being based on the Gallatin transaction. The state courts issued an ousting decree, from which an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. This appeal was based on the argument that the alleged criminal agree ment, if it were an offence, was an offence against the federal law, the Sherman anti-trust law, and not an of-fence against the laws of Tennessee; that the statute was unconstitutional because it violated the equal protec-tion and due process clauses of the Constitution and because the statute of limitations was effective.

Justice Holmes announced the opinion of the court. All the contentions of the company were disposed of favorably to the state.

THE WAY TO A MAN'S HEART

John Bolles was what is known as a confirmed old bachelor, but, after becoming a regular visitor at the delightful suburban home of the lovely Gridley girls, presided over by their widowed mother, it gradually grew plain to Bolles that the life offered by the hotels and clubs did not satis-fy the homing instincts of the human

The girls were beauties, and a love of beauty was one of Bolles' weak points.

He was fortunate enough to bask in the good graces of Mrs. Gridley, a splendid woman from whom the daughters inherited their good looks.

A rich bachelor of good family, good habits and good breeding, who tells a sufficiently pitifull story of the monotony of hotel cooking and the loneliness of taking one's meals with only a newspaper for a companion, is sure to appeal to the sympathies of some home maker, and Bolles became a privileged family friend, at liberty to drop in at meals and join the home circle informally. Mrs. Gridley was an ideal hostess and withal she knew how to cook and personally superin-tended the culinary details of her household. Bolles was something of an epicure, and the viands which ap-peared on Mrs. Gridley's table excelled anything his favorite club had to offer.

ties Bolles feted the girls at exclusive clubs and indulged them in motor rides and operas. The younger men couldn't keep up with him in these matters, and, in spite of inevitable rivalry, he felt that he had a reasonable chance with the Gridley girls. His sense of honor restrained him from paying marked attention to any one of these young maidens without first obtaining their mother's sanction, and he intended, as soon as his wavering fancy could fix itself, to ask the maternal permission to press his suit for the maid of his choice. But, owing to the capricious distribution among the three of the especial points of beauty mentioned as appealing most strongly to his susceptibilities, he found it extremely difficult to locate his heart. Sally's eyes played havoc with his soul, and he framed a little speech to be delivered to Mrs. Gridley at an op-portune moment. It began in this

"Mrs. Gridley. I have a most important question to ask. Do you think Sally could learn to care for me?"

He went so far as to deliver the first part of this address, with some nervousness. The mother dropped her white lids, and, as he was gather-ing courage to put the question, his artisic eye was begulled by the sweetness of her mouth and the clear line of her chin, and his shallow heart straightway turned to Jane, who had that same mouth and chin in its per fection. In his sudden indecision, and being obliged to conclude his remark, he asked, "May I have your recipe for mincement for my sister in Buffalo?'

On still another occasion, when, with a dry tongue he had tried to con-fess to her his love for Ruth, the lady turned the clear, green-gray eyes of Sally full upon him, and he was lost again and ridiculously begged to be allowed to partake of baked beans with the family on the coming Saturday evening. He knew she must have thought him a fearful gourmand to be so affected by the prospects of a plate of beans, but that was the only sub-stitute his panic-stricken intellect could make.

In desperation he resolved to begin over again, with Sally as his heart's desire. One evening at the Gridley's, after One evening at the Gridley's, after a dinner which lingered in his memory, Mrs. Gridley and Bolles were sitting alone by the cheerfull library fire. The girls had gone skating with a rolicking crowd. Their mother was engaged with a bit of needlework beneath the softly shaded lamp, and her guest was absently regarding her. He was wondering if she could make a chicken pie like that which even now beguiled his memory. He was sure she could not. Suddenly he became aware that he was earnestly studying the face of his hostess as she bent over her sewing. For the first time he seemed to see her with an identity of her own, instead of a beautiful composite of her daughters. The sudden revelation that came to him caused the blood to leave his head with a queer cooling off process, and he felt a strange calmness and clearness of vision. Then the blood came leaping back and his heart began to pound.

"I think I can guess," she laughed, and Bolles noted a tinge of bitterness in the laugh. "You want to help us with the fish cakes Sunday morning."
The shaft went home and Bolles knew it was merited.

"Dearest Margaret," he said hum-bly, "I deserve that. But even your discernment has not fathomed the extent of my desire. I want to help with the fish cakes every morning!" And the sewing work was cast ruthlessly aside.

When the girls came home, breezy and giggling, they seemed very young indeed and positively tiresome. They were not in the least surprised to hear that Mr. Bolles was going to marry their mother. It was evident they had considered him all along as her adconsidered him all along as ner admirer. And so he had been, but it had taken him some time to wake up to it. How the lady herself had regarded him may be left to the astuteness of the reader.—ANNIE REYNOLDS.

The Senate passed the House bill without amendment, instructing the Secretary of War and the Chief of Army Engineers to raise the vessel. Nothing but the signature of the Presi dent now prevents the measure from becoming a law.

It is provided that all the bodies found shall be interred in Arlington National Cemetery. The mast of the battleship will be placed near the graves. The bill appropriates $100,- 000 for the work

The consent of the Cuban authori-ties must first be obtained, but no difficulty there is anticipated.

During the past twelve years many bills have been introduced in both branches of Congress to raise the Maine, and petitions have been con-tinually received from all sections of the country praying that the sunken ship be raised and its imprisoned vic-tims brought home for interment. The Chief of Engineers said that following an order from the Secretary of War a diver would be sent down to make an examination. The methods of raising the Maine will depend entirely on what the diver reports.

FAVOR BIG STICK.

Leaders Still See Hope for Taft Leg-Islative Programme.

Washington, May 9.-Some of the Senate leaders, less pessimistic than those who advise the abandonment of the Taft legislative programme and the immediate adjournment of Congress, will lay before the President on his return to Washington a proposition that the time has come when it is necessary for him to take the big stick from its hiding place and wave it in the faces of Republican Senators and Representatives who are standing in the way of his legislative plans. They take the position that to aban-don the railroad bill, the postal savings bank bill, the statehood bill and conservative legislation would be a confession of weakness entirely out of

of the Republican party, and would mean the certain turning over of the next House of Representatives to the Democrats.
