Memorial Day.

Memorial Day in the North and South fall different dates, but their object is the same, even though in one section it is the men who wore the blue that are specially remembered and in the other the men who wore the gray.

It is a holy day, a day of peculiar pathos and reminiscence. Everything combines to make it so. It is seen in the fast thinning ranks of the men who fought so valiantly nearly fifty years ago, and in the rapidly increasing numbers of green mounds in the cemeteries of the North and South. It is also seen in the memorial character of the day, in the utterances of speakers who extol the heroism and virtues of both the dead and the living, and in the reverent and religious character of the exercises.

It used to be said with a sneer that republics are ungrateful, and that in time the deeds of men who served them would be forgotten. As one considers how this country remembers in practical and beautiful ways the heroic services of men who have shown their patriotism on fields of battle they see the falsity of such a charge. The numerous monuments, the care bestowed upon the cemeteries, the generous pensions paid the veterans who survive and the widows of those who have died, and the annual observance of Memorial Day are the most convincing proofs that this republic is not ungrateful. In all this the United States remembers its dead and living heroes, as no other nation has ever done.

On this day we honor the memory of those who died for their country. Perhaps there are some who wish they had lived in those stirring days of the past, that they too might have sealed their devotion to their country by their death. But while in these peaceful days there is fortunately no demand for one's death in order to show his loyalty there is a constant demand for one's life. So, then let each prove his unselfish patriotism by living as a true American, in faithfully discharging his duties as a citizen, and by advancing in every right way the well-being of his country.

The National Banks, The Causes Which Led to Their Establishment.

For more than three quarters of a century the people of the United States had suffered more or less continually, and terribly at times, from the evils of a defective banking system. There had been considerable improvement in the laws controlling the banks in some of the states, notably in the state of New York; but there were some 1600 banks located in all parts of the country issuing circulating notes as money, under the tax laws of 34 different states. The notes of nearly all of them were always at a discount of from one to fifteen per cent, or even more, and the discount was constantly varying. When the country merchants went to the cities to buy goods, he must first go to a broker and pay a heavy discount to get his money exchanged for notes of the city banks, which were the only currency the city merchants would receive.

The notes of so many different banks, all differing in style, and appearance; many of them printed on poor paper, and ragged, and from plates so coarsely engraved that they were easily imitated and altered, made the handling of money, which should be an agreeable operation, a difficult and troublesome task. The notes of one sixth of all the banks had been counterfeited. There were 3,546 kinds of imitations, and large amounts of spurious notes afloat, and there were 3,039 alterations of genuine notes being raised to higher denominations.

There were weighty reasons why the states system should be abolished, but so strongly were the existing institutions entrenched behind capital, and the influence it always commands, it is doubtful whether there even would have been a better system established by congress for the whole nation had it not been for the great pressure for money to carry on the war to preserve the Union. Congress had authorized the issue of $300,000,000 of legal tender notes, and further issues would be hazardous, as it might endanger the whole amount in circulation of becoming as worthless as the old Continental notes. Money is said to be "the sinews of war," and something had to be done to make a brisk demand for government bonds, or the war would be a failure for the lack of means for its successful prosecution.

CASTELAR.

As with the poor so with the tramps we have them with us constantly. And what to do with them when they come to the back door for food and money is a problem that almost every housewife has to meet many times in the course of a year. Usually the problem is met by giving the tramp something to eat, and probably money, which generally finds its way into the nearest saloon. That it is an unsatisfactory plan everyone admits, for it encourages idleness and aggravates the evil. But in Germany they do things better. The municipalities gather in the tramps and make them work. If a man reveals an unshaven and unwashed appearance with other evidences of being a "Weary Willie" he is gathered in and, willy-nilly, he has to work. The plan seems to be a success for the army of tramps is steadily decreasing. The municipalities in this country might well follow the German method.

J. P. Bahl, the new barber and proprietor of the pool room, lunch house, and confectionery store, has placed a large artistic sign on the front of his building and hungry strangers in Laporte need have no further trouble in finding a place to satisfy their appetites between meals.

The New Baby.
Well, Jimmie," said the visitor, "I understand you have a new baby here."
"Yes," said Jimmie. "He got here last Tuesday night."
"Whom does he look like, your father or your mother?" asked the visitor.
"We don't know yet," said Jimmie. "He seems kind of undecided yet."
"They tell me he has your father's nose," said the visitor.
"Yes," said Jimmie. "He has pa's nose, and ma's mouth, and Aunt Sarah's ears, and between you and me I'm for givin' him grandpa's teeth. He ain't got any of his own, and grandpa's got two sets. What I'm afraid of is that if they don't give 'em to him he'll get mine, and I need 'em in my business."

No Avoiding It.
If a man gets into the habit of hunting trouble he's sure to find it, and if he's so lazy that he always tries to avoid it, it will find him.—Catholic Standard and Times.

THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS,
Thos. E. Kennedy, Clerk

Beware of the man who constantly finds fault and runs down the place in which he lives or the society to which he belongs. In the discouragement he imparts and the cold water he throws on every project, however good, for the betterment of the community he is one of the greatest curses with which any town can be afflicted.

Sheriff's Sale

By virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Court of Common Pleas of Sullivan County, Pennsylvania, to me directed and delivered, there will be exposed to public sale, at the premises herein described, at the village of Shunk, Sullivan County, Pa., on Wednesday, June 15, 1910, at eleven o'clock, a. m., the following described property, to wit:

All that certain lot, piece or parcel of land, lying and being in the Township of Fox, County of Sullivan, State of Pennsylvania, bounded and described as follows:

Commencing at an iron pipe in the center of South Street Road; thence along lot of W. H. Fanning, in center of said road South, forty-three degrees twelve minutes west, three and seven-tenths rods to iron post at corner of W. H. Fanning's lot; thence south, thirty-six degrees west three and one hundred forty-five thousandths rods in center of road to iron post; thence north, forty-eight degrees forty-five minutes west, along lands of J. H. Campbell and A. E. Campbell, seven and thirty-eight one hundredths perches to iron post; thence north, forty-one degrees seventeen minutes east, along said land six and three-tenths perches to iron post in old line; thence along lands of Ella Porter, south, fifty-three degrees thirty-seven minutes east, seven and two hundred fifteen one-thousandths perches to the place of beginning. Containing 47 square rods and 13 3-5 square feet.

The above lot is improved and has erected thereon a good dwelling house and a one-story store building. Good garden; excellent fruit trees on lot, the same being situated in the village of Shunk and being desirable for residence or business.

Seized, taken into execution and to be sold as the property of L. I. Campbell at the suit of the Boston Shoe Company, now to the use of Preston Brothers.
